Effect of proof that one vehicle struck the other

(1) Fact that one automobile struck the other and not vice versa is not conclusive on whether motorist whose automobile was struck had preempted the crossing.—Di Chiara v. Hackett, La.App., 186 So. 113.

(2) The fact that it was defendant's automobile which ran into the automobile in which plaintiffs were riding was not in itself a controlling consideration on the question whether defendant, who was the favored driver in approaching obstructed intersection, was negligent.—Winston v. Bacon, 111 P.2d 764, 8 Wash.2d 216.

Probative value

Although some of the details of intersectional automobile collision given by defendant motorist in his testimony were not in accord with the trial court's ultimate findings, it did not follow that defendant's testimony was entirely unreliable and that injured plaintiffs' version of the accident was entirely correct.—Winston v. Bacon, supra.

the vehicles had physical contact with one another.⁷⁸ So general rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of defendant's alleged negligence with respect to lights, signals, and lookout.⁷⁹ Slight evidence of the circumstances may place the fault in an action for injuries resulting from a rear-end collision.⁸⁰ Where the burden is on defendant, he must show his freedom from fault by a clear preponderance of the evidence.⁸¹

(4) Collision with, or Endangering, Approaching Vehicle

General rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of evidence of the defendant's negligence when vehicles traveling in the same direction and a vehicle approaching from the opposite direction were so operated as to cause damage or injury to the plaintiff.

General rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence of negligence when motor vehicles traveling in the same direction and a vehicle approaching from the opposite direction were operated in such a manner as to cause damage or injury.⁸²

(3) To authorize verdict or judgment

n. Bicycles or Motorcycles

In an action against the operator or owner of a motor vehicle for injuries sustained by a bicyclist or motorcyclist, the fact that the injury was produced by some negligence or wrongful act must be shown by a preponderance of the evidence; but circumstantial evidence may be sufficient.

The fact that the injury was produced by some negligence or wrongful act of the driver must be shown by evidence reasonably supporting such conclusion in an action against the owner or operator of a motor vehicle in an action for injuries sustained by a bicyclist,¹⁰ or motorcyclist,¹¹ and it is ment in favor of streetcar passenger.

incumbent on plaintiff to establish the averments of his declaration or complaint by a preponderance of the evidence.¹² The alleged negligence need not necessarily be shown by direct and positive testimony;¹³ but may be shown by facts and circumstances which fairly suggest that defendant's negligence operated to produce the injuries and which afford a reasonable inference to that effect;¹⁴ but speculation as to how or from what cause the accident occurred cannot be allowed to stand for proof or be made the basis of a verdict in favor of plaintiff.¹⁵ The fact that the collision may not have occurred in the exact spot where plaintiff testified it happened would not necessarily cause plaintiff's case to fall.¹⁶

to the exercise of the care owing to his guest,²⁴ affirmative proof is required,²⁵ and plaintiff may not rely on speculation or unjustifiable inferences to make out his case,²⁶ although slight evidence may be sufficient to fasten responsibility on defendant.²⁷

General rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to establish a prima facie case,²⁸ or to overcome a prima facie case²⁹ or a presumption or inference of negligence.³⁰

In order to recover against defendant for injuries received while riding on a motor vehicle with defendant's servant contrary to defendant's instructions, plaintiff must establish by clear and convincing evidence that defendant knew of the violation of its rules and acquiesced therein to the extent of allowing the practice to continue without objection or serious protest.³¹

ligence, or wanton and willful misconduct,³⁹ or reckless disregard of the guest's rights.⁴⁰

As to the quantum of proof required, the statements in the cases vary. Thus it has been said that a preponderance of the evidence is required to prove gross negligence,⁴¹ recklessness,⁴² wanton misconduct,⁴³ or gross negligence, or willful and wanton misconduct.⁴⁴ On the other hand, it has been said that substantial evidence is required to prove wanton or willful negligence,⁴⁵ or that the driver was grossly negligent or that the vehicle was being operated in a manner indicating a reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights, at least in the absence of a showing that the accident was caused intentionally or that any of the parties in the vehicle was intoxicated.⁴⁶ Furthermore, it has been said

Mental state

(1) On the question whether the driver was guilty of willful or wanton misconduct, there must be substantial evidence supporting the conclusion that his mental state constituted a disposition to perversity.—Schulz v. Fible, 48 N.E.2d 899, 71 Ohio App. 353.

(2) Before a jury may infer that a motorist was conscious that his conduct would result in injury, there must be evidence from which the jury can deduce what caused resulting accident, and only then are jury justified in considering whether motorist was guilty of wanton misconduct within meaning of statute.—Randall v. Stager, 49 A.2d 689, 355 Pa. 352.

46. Or.—Storm v. Thompson, 64 P.2d 1309, 155 Or. 686.

that proof of willful negligence should be unusually strong and convincing,⁴⁷ and that there must be conclusive proof of gross negligence.⁴⁸

Wanton and willful misconduct may be sufficiently proved by proof of wanton misconduct alone,⁴⁹ but proof of ordinary negligence is not sufficient to establish gross negligence,⁵⁰ or willful and wanton misconduct,⁵¹ and a showing of simple, or even gross, negligence is insufficient to establish wanton or willful negligence.⁵² Proof that the guest expressed dissatisfaction with the manner of the operation of the vehicle does not ipso facto establish willful misconduct of the host.⁵³ Evidence of reckless driving prior to the time of the accident will not establish liability where the evidence shows that at the time of the accident the driver was not guilty of gross negligence.⁵⁴ Plaintiff need not negative every possibility which might relieve defendant from liability.⁵⁵ Plaintiff may prove his case directly or by legitimate inference,⁵⁶

and witnesses of the occurrence are not essential.⁵⁷ The proof must rest on facts and proper inferences, however, before there can be a recovery of damages;⁵⁸ suspicion and presumption are not sufficient,⁵⁹ and neither is proof of a mere possibility.⁶⁰

(3) Assumption of Risk

General rules apply in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence on the issue of assumption of risk.

In an action for injuries resulting to the occupant of a motor vehicle from the alleged negligence of the owner or operator, general rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence on the issue of assumption of risk.⁶¹

Intent to injure

To establish willful misconduct of host, within automobile guest statute it is not necessary that an actual, executed intent to injure the guests be proved by parol evidence.—Wright v. Sellers, 78 P.2d 209, 25 Cal.App.2d 603.

Knowledge of peril and probable consequences

(1) In order to sustain a charge of wantonness, there must be evidence to show or create a reasonable inference that the driver had knowledge of the occupant's peril and of the probable consequences of his conduct, and with reckless disregard of such consequences he pursued that conduct which caused the injury.—Griffin Lumber Co. v. Harper, 25 So.2d 505, 247 Ala. 616.

(2) Testimony that defendant became angry when requested by plaintiffs to decelerate speed did not justify inference that she acted with knowledge that such speed would probably lead to injuries to plaintiffs and herself under circumstances—Katz v. Kuppin, 112 P.2d 681, 44 Cal.App.2d 406.

Evidence that the owner or operator of an automobile was intoxicated, but not unconscious, at the time of the accident does not prove, or certainly does not conclusively prove, that he was incapable of heedless and reckless disregard, or of conscious indifference, within the meaning of the guest statute—Scott v. Gardner, 156 S.W.2d 513, 137 Tex. 628, 141 A.L.R. 50.

Number of drinks and subsequent actions

Trial court or jury may consider number of drinks of intoxicating liquor which one has imbibed and his subsequent actions, in determining whether at time of accident such person was intoxicated within statute allowing recovery by guest when accident in which guest is injured results from intoxication of driver.—Knickrihm v. Hazel, 40 P.2d 305, 3 Cal.App.2d 721.

In an action against the owner or operator of a motor vehicle for injuries to an occupant thereof, general rules have been applied in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence on the issue of negligence with relation to speed and control.⁶⁷ Where the host traveling at an alleged excessive speed on an arterial highway relies on the presence of a stop sign, his knowledge of the presence thereof must affirmatively appear in the evidence.⁶⁸

§ 519. — Proximate Cause

In actions brought to recover for injuries sustained

as the result of the negligent operation of motor vehicles, the causal relation between the negligence or other misconduct of the party sought to be charged and the injuries complained of must be shown by a preponderance of the evidence.

In actions brought to recover for injuries sustained as the result of the negligent operation of motor vehicles, it must appear by a preponderance of the evidence that the negligence or other misconduct of the party sought to be charged was the proximate cause, or at least a contributing proximate cause, of the injuries.⁶⁹ It is not necessary, in order to sustain this burden, to exclude other possible causes;⁷⁰ but defendant, if he attempts to prove that the injuries were caused by some intervening sole proximate cause, other than his own negligence, must show that the injuries were not the natural or probable consequence of his original negligence.⁷¹ The fact that defendant's negligence proximately caused the accident need not be proved by direct testimony,⁷² and circumstantial evidence is sufficient if it furnishes a reasonable basis for inference that some negligent act of the operator was the cause, or a contributing cause, of the injury.⁷³ Where the evidence is insufficient to show the cause of the injury, there is a failure of proof,⁷⁴ and the same is true where it is merely a matter of speculation, conjecture, or surmise whether the injury was or was not due to the negligence of defendant.⁷⁵

Evidence held sufficient. Applying the foregoing principles and the rules governing weight and sufficiency of evidence generally, evidence in particular cases has been held sufficient to show that negligence or other misconduct in the operation of a motor vehicle was the proximate cause of the injuries,⁷⁶ or that such negligence or misconduct

a. General Rules

The contributory negligence of one injured by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, or his freedom from contributory negligence, must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence; circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to prove contributory negligence.

In accordance with the rules relating to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to contributory negligence in general, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 247–250, also 45 C.J. p 1273 note 83–p 1278 note 29, in order to bar recovery by one injured by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle it must appear by a preponderance of the evidence that he was negligent;²² there must ist prior to, and at the time of, the accident,³² and leading to a reasonable inference of due care;³³ due care may be proved in the same manner as negligence.³⁴

Evidence on the issue of contributory negligence is to receive a reasonable interpretation.³⁵ Before a plaintiff suing for injuries from a motor vehicle can be found guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, the established facts must be such that the mind can draw no other conclusion than that he was negligent.³⁶

The presumption of due care may be rebutted by incontrovertible physical facts, that is, facts of which the court will take judicial notice, or by evidence;³⁷ such presumption can be overcome by the testimony of disinterested witnesses, even if the testimony is conflicting and disputed.³⁸

b. Particular Persons; Persons in Particular Situations

In particular cases, evidence has been held sufficient or insufficient to prove, or disprove, the contributory negligence of pedestrians, guests, children, and other persons injured in motor vehicle accidents.

In the application of the principles stated supra subdivision a of this section, the weight and sufficiency of evidence adduced in particular cases has been adjudicated in connection with the contributory negligence of motorists generally,³⁹ persons on foot generally,⁴⁰ pedestrians crossing streets or

Effect of right-of-way statute

(1) Fact that statute gave motorist right of way over pedestrian was not conclusive as to whether pedestrian was contributorily negligent.—Keys v. Griffith, 55 P.2d 15, 153 Or. 190.

(2) Evidence held to show that pedestrian was not on crosswalk when struck, so that statute giving her right of way was inapplicable.—Brewster v. Ludtke, 247 N.W. 449, 211 Wis. 344.

Failure to avoid crossing highway

The failure of deceased to make a U turn and park his automobile on the other side of the highway so as to avoid crossing on foot was not prima facie evidence of negligence, since pedestrians have the right to use highways.—Synwolt v. Klank, 15 N.E.2d 895, 296 Ill.App. 79.

Violation of statute; prima facie evidence

(1) The violation of statute requiring pedestrian to walk on left side of a roadway, giving way to oncoming traffic, constitutes prima facie evidence of negligence.—Nicholas v. Minnesota Milk Co., 4 N.W.2d 84, 212 Minn. 333—Wojtowicz v. Belden, 1 N.W.2d 409, 211 Minn. 461.

(2) Mere violation of statute prohibiting pedestrian from walking along highway outside of business or residence district otherwise than close to his left-hand edge of highway did not overcome presumption that decedent took ordinary care.—Scaif v. Elcher, 53 P.2d 268, 11 Cal.App.2d 44.

Observation of movements

Evidence that pedestrian was seen to step from a position of safety into path of automobile or that he was seen walking in particular lane of highway was not necessary to support finding of his negligence.—Barry v. Maddalena, 146 P.2d 974, 63 Cal.App.2d 302.

Sudden danger

Evidence held sufficient for jury to infer that pedestrians were within rule that prudent person confronted with sudden danger may fail to use best judgment, omit some precaution, or may not use best available method of meeting danger, and still not be negligent.—Healy v. Moore, 187 A. 679, 108 Vt. 324, followed in 187 A. 692, 108 Vt. 351.

Where soldiers were marching under orders at time they were struck by motor vehicle, the fact that they were marching on wrong side of road could not be considered as contributory negligence on their part.—Smith v. Town of Orangetown, D.C.N.Y., 57 F.Supp. 52, affirmed, C.C.A., 150 F.2d 782, certiorari denied 66 S.Ct. 171, 326 U.S. 787, 90 L.Ed. 462.

tributory negligence of other persons.⁵³

c. Collisions between Motor Vehicles at Intersections

In particular cases, evidence has been held sufficient or insufficient to prove, or disprove, the contributory negligence of persons involved in collisions between motor vehicles at intersections.

In the application of the principles stated supra subdivision a of this section, evidence adduced in particular actions for personal injuries or property damage resulting from collisions between motor vehicles crossing, or attempting to cross, the paths of each other, or at intersections generally, has been held sufficient to show contributory negligence, or insufficient to show the absence thereof,⁵³ in cutting a corner, or failing to go past the middle of

Failure to warn

Jury may consider, on question of automobile guest's contributory negligence in automobile accident case, whether guest failed to warn or protest to driver.—Lazar v. Black & White Cab Co., 179 S.E. 250, 50 Ga.App. 567.

Ownership as showing right to control vehicle

With respect to negligence of plaintiff passenger, passenger's ownership of automobile involved in collision while operated by her minor son, in absence of evidence that she had divested herself of right to control, is sufficient to warrant finding that passenger retained right to control operation of automobile.—Levangie v. Gutterson, 194 N.E. 79, 289 Mass. 287.

Failure as not conclusive evidence of negligence

(1) Fact that plaintiff, whose vehicle was struck by defendant's at intersection, did not see defendant's vehicle was not conclusive evidence that she was negligent.—Gaines v. Ratnowsky, 41 N.E.2d 25, 311 Mass. 254.

(2) Fact that neither plaintiff saw defendants' approaching automobile at intersection was not conclusive evidence that plaintiffs were negligent, although it was a factor of importance.—Morton v. Dobson, 30 N.E.2d 231, 307 Mass. 394.

d. Other Collisions

In particular cases, evidence has been held sufficient or insufficient to prove, or disprove, the contributory negligence of persons involved in collisions between motor vehicles meeting or approaching each other, or one of which is overtaking or passing the other, or one of which is parked or standing, or in other collisions involving one or more motor vehicles.

In the application of the principles stated supra subdivision a of this section, the weight and sufficiency of evidence as showing or not showing contributory negligence have been adjudicated in particular actions for personal injuries or property damage resulting from collisions between motor vehicles meeting or approaching each other;⁹⁹ be-

Assumption of absence of illegal obstructions

Evidence authorized finding that trucks of both defendants were illegally parked and that one defendant's truck was stopped illegally, so that such trucks constituted "illegal obstructions" upon highway within meaning of statute giving plaintiff's truck driver right to assume, until he knew or should have known otherwise, that there were no illegal obstructions upon highway.—Knaus Truck Lines v. Commercial Freight Lines, 29 N.W.2d 204, 238 Iowa 1356.

from a private way;⁴ between a motor vehicle and an animal-drawn vehicle;⁵ between a motor vehicle and a railroad train or other vehicle on railroad tracks;⁶ and between a motor vehicle and an airplane taxiing down a runway.⁷

e. Acts in Emergencies

In particular cases involving injuries from the operation of motor vehicles, the sufficiency of evidence has been adjudged as to the existence of an emergency, the person causing it, and the exercise of reasonable prudence in the emergency.

In particular cases the evidence adduced has been held sufficient to show that plaintiff or decedent motorist contributed to, or caused, the creation of an emergency,⁸ that defendant motorist created an emergency,⁹ or to show that in view of an existing emergency reasonable prudence was exercised by,

or that there was no contributory negligence on the part of, a motorist,¹⁰ a motorcyclist,¹¹ or a pedestrian.¹²

In other cases evidence has been held to show, in connection with the question of contributory negligence, that there was no emergency.¹³

f. Proximate Cause

In order to bar recovery for injury caused by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, contributory negligence must be shown by a preponderance of evidence to have proximately caused, or contributed proximately to cause, the injury.

In order to bar recovery by one injured by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle on the ground of his contributory negligence, it must appear by a preponderance of the evidence that the injured person's negligence proximately caused, or

Contributory negligence as matter of law

In order to authorize finding that automobile occupant was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, evidence must show beyond question that injury resulted from his own acts.—Ford Motor Co. v. Madden, 42 S.W.2d 165, affirmed Ford Motor Co. v. Madden, Civ.App., 76 S.W.2d 474, 124 Tex. 131.

Violation of statute; overcoming prima facie evidence

(1) While violation of a statute prohibiting driving where there is such a number of persons in the front seat as to obstruct operator's view, and providing that presence of more than three persons over sixteen in front seat of a noncommercial vehicle shall be deemed such a number, is prima facie evidence of negligence, its probative force may be overcome by proof that violation was not proximate producing or contributing cause of accident.—Schnack v. Sterling, 300 N.Y.S. 297, 252 App.Div. 894, appeal denied.

Prima facie showing

Fact that automobile was driven on wrong side of road when involved in collision with other automobile makes prima facie showing of proximate cause as matter of law, and, to avoid such effect, it must be shown that being on wrong side occurred without fault, unless collision be defensible under last clear chance doctrine.—Olson v. g. Last Clear Chance

In an action involving a motor vehicle accident, a case can be made under the last clear chance doctrine only by a preponderance of evidence; circumstantial evidence of negligence may be sufficient.

In an action involving a motor vehicle accident, a party seeking to make a case under the doctrine variously known as the last clear chance, humanitarian, or subsequent negligence doctrine, or the doctrine of apparent or discovered peril, must do so by a preponderance or greater weight of the evidence.⁸⁰ A motorist's alleged last clear chance to avoid an accident cannot rest on conjecture or speculation,⁸¹ but must be established by substantial⁸² or substantive⁸³ evidence. In this connection, a motorist's discovery or awareness of a pedestrian's perilous position may be shown by circumstantial evidence,⁸⁴ and the motorist's testimony that he did not discover it, or was not aware of it, is not conclusive of the matter;⁸⁵ likewise, the fact that the motorist could have stopped in time may be proved by circumstantial evidence.⁸⁶

The evidence adduced in particular cases has been held sufficient to render the doctrine applicable or to make out a case thereunder,⁸⁷ as in the case of injuries to pedestrians generally,⁸⁸ pedestrians crossing streets or highways,⁸⁹ bicyclists,⁹⁰ and children,⁹¹ and in the case of collision at intersections,⁹² and, likewise, according to the de-

Accuracy in gauging time and distance

Under the humanitarian doctrine, neither the court, in ruling on demurrer to plaintiff's evidence, nor jury, in resolving question of facts submitted to it, need gauge time and distances with fine accuracy in determining whether defendant could have stopped his truck, slackened speed thereof, or swerved to the right, and thereby avoided injury to deceased.—Swain v. Anders, supra.

Distance in which stop possible

In action by pedestrian against motorist under humanitarian doctrine, evidence that motorist actually stopped automobile within space of two feet, although not introduced in response to hypothetical question, was sufficient to meet requirement that there be evidence adduced as to distance in which automobile could have been brought to stop.—Robinson v. O'Shanky, Mo.App., 96 S.W.2d 895.

4. TRIAL, JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW

§ 521. Questions of Law and Fact

The general rules governing the functions of the court and jury in civil actions apply in actions to recover damages for injuries caused by the operation of motor vehicles, and, accordingly, questions of fact are for the determination of the jury and questions of law are for the court.

The general rules governing the functions of the court and jury in civil actions apply in actions to recover damages for injuries caused by the operation of motor vehicles.⁷ Accordingly, where the evidence is conflicting or is of such a character that different inferences might reasonably be drawn therefrom, the case is properly submitted to the jury,⁸ and it is the jury's province to determine the credibility of the witnesses,⁹ and the weight or probative value of the evidence.¹⁰ Where, because of the legal insufficiency of the evidence or for other reasons, there is no liability on the part of defendant, as a matter of law it is proper for the court to grant a nonsuit or to direct a verdict for defendant,¹¹ and, where the evidence indisputably shows that defendant was guilty of negligence proximate-

ly causing the accident, and that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent, the court may properly direct a verdict for plaintiff on the question of liability.¹² The question whether the evidence is sufficient to justify submitting the case to the jury depends on the facts of the particular case.¹³ A motor vehicle accident case will not be withdrawn from the jury for want of legally sufficient evidence if there is any competent and pertinent evidence, however slight, legally sufficient as tending to prove negligence.¹⁴

The specific questions of fact, which arise during the course of the trial, are for the jury's determination,¹⁵ including such questions as whether a collision occurred between plaintiff's vehicle and defendant's vehicle,¹⁶ the nature and extent of plaintiff's injury,¹⁷ the manner in which the accident occurred,¹⁸ questions pertaining to the place of the accident,¹⁹ physical facts with respect to the

Contributory negligence

In action by pedestrian for injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence in operating truck, causing pedestrian to run into path of motor vehicle of a third person, refusing to direct a verdict for defendant was error, where evidence showed that pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.—Turnquist v. Rosala Bros., 83 P.2d 353, 196 Wash. 434.

Notice

Where recovery in automobile negligence action against city police officer was based on negligent operation of police patrol car and city was not made a party to action, and complaint failed to allege filing with city comptroller and with officer of notices required by statute as it read at time of accident, denial of motion for directed verdict in officer's favor was error.—Feisthamel v. § 522. — Proximate Cause

- a. In general
- b. Negligence

a. In General

The issue of proximate cause of an injury allegedly resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, and issues pertaining to proximate cause, are for the determination of the jury or other trier of the facts where the evidence is conflicting or reasonable minds might differ in their conclusions therefrom.

Where the evidence concerning the proximate cause of an injury allegedly resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle is in conflict, or the evidence is such that reasonable minds might differ in their conclusions therefrom, the issue of proximate cause of the injury,³⁴ and all disputed issues pertaining to proximate cause,³⁵ are questions of fact for the determination of the jury or

Collisions in rapid succession

Where the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was involved in two collisions in rapid succession, whether plaintiff's injuries were sustained in the first or second collision was a question for the jury.—Leinbach v. Pickwick Greyhound Lines, 10 P.2d 33, 135 Kan. 40.

Statutory provision

The provision of guest statute, that question of proximate cause shall be solely for the jury, does not constitute an unconstitutional attempt on the part of the legislature to exercise judicial power, since such provision does not prevent courts from passing on legal sufficiency of the evidence, but is merely surplusage and adds nothing to power of jury that jury did not already possess.—Cormier v. (2) Of Defendant

(a) In general

(b) Specific acts of negligence

(a) In General

Whether the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries allegedly sustained in a motor vehicle accident is a question of fact for the determination of the jury or other trier of the facts where the evidence is conflicting or is such that reasonable men may differ in their conclusions therefrom.

Where there is a conflict in the evidence, or where the evidence is such that reasonable men may differ in their conclusions therefrom, the question whether plaintiff's injuries which were allegedly sustained in a motor vehicle accident and for which recovery is sought were proximately caused by defendant's negligence,⁵⁴ such as whether the injuries were caused by his failure to comply with motor vehicle or traffic laws,⁵⁵ is a question of fact for the determination of the jury or other trier of the facts. Accordingly, under conflicting evidence or evidence subject to different inferences, it is a question of fact for the jury whether defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of an injury to another's motor vehicle or to an occupant of another's motor vehicle, sustained in a collision between jury to a person on horseback,⁶¹ on a bicycle,⁶² on a horse-drawn vehicle,⁶³ on a street car,⁶⁴ or on another type of vehicle;⁶⁵ or whether defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of damage to property other than a motor vehicle, and the resulting monetary loss from the damage.⁶⁶

Where the evidence of defendant's negligence as the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury is not substantially conflicting and reasonable minds may reach but one conclusion therefrom, the question whether defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury is a question of law for the court.⁶⁷ So, if there is no substantial evidence of defendant's negligence or of a causal connection between his negligence and plaintiff's injury, the question should not be submitted to the jury but the court should determine the question as a matter of law in favor of defendant;⁶⁸ and in like manner,

if all the substantial and credible evidence shows clearly and conclusively that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, the question should not be submitted to the jury but the court should determine the question as a matter of law in favor of plaintiff.⁶⁹

Intervening cause. Where the evidence is conflicting or different reasonable inferences may be derived therefrom, the question whether an intervening occurrence or an intervening act by another person, rather than defendant's negligence, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury is a question of fact for the jury.⁷⁰ So, ordinarily, it is a question for the jury whether the intervening occurrence or act should reasonably have been foreseen by defendant as a consequence of his negligence.⁷¹ Where there is no substantial evidence of a new and independent cause, there is no question of independent cause for the determination of the jury.⁷²

Concurrent negligence. Where the evidence is conflicting or subject to different reasonable inferences, the question whether plaintiff's injury was caused by the concurrent negligence of defendant and a third person or codefendant,⁷³ or by defendant's negligence combining with circumstances which by themselves would render the accident unavoidable,⁷⁴ is a question of fact for the jury. Where there is no substantial evidence of concurrent negligence proximately causing the injury,⁷⁵ or where the evidence indisputably and conclusively shows that the accident would not have occurred but for the concurrent negligence of several defendants,⁷⁶ the question is one of law for the court.

(b) Specific Acts of Negligence

On conflicting evidence, the question whether specific acts of negligence charged were the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury is one of fact.

Where the evidence is conflicting or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, the question whether specific acts of negligence charged were the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury is a question of fact to be determined by the jury.⁷⁷ Accordingly, whether specific acts of negligence charged were the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury are questions of fact, such as defendant's negligence in operating the motor vehicle although he is incompetent to do so,⁷⁸ or in permitting its operation by an incompetent driver;⁷⁹ negligence in starting the motor vehicle;⁸⁰

without lights or with improper lights,⁴ or in parking the vehicle without taking precautions that it would not be put in motion.⁵

On the other hand, where there is no evidence on the issue, or where the evidence is not in substantial conflict and reasonable minds may reach but one conclusion therefrom, the question whether the specific act of negligence charged was a proximate cause of the injury is one of law for the court.⁶ Under such circumstances, particular questions have been held to be questions of law, such as defendant's negligence in operating or permitting the operation of a motor vehicle in a defective condition⁷ or without proper lights;⁸ operating the motor vehicle at an excessive speed;⁹ failure to

(3) Of Plaintiff

(a) In general

(b) Specific acts of negligence

(a) In General

Whether the plaintiff's contributory negligence was a proximate cause of his injuries is a question of fact for the determination of the jury or other trier of the facts where the evidence is conflicting or is such that reasonable men may differ in their conclusions therefrom.

Where there is a conflict in the evidence, or where the evidence is such that reasonable men may differ in their conclusions therefrom, the question whether the injuries which were allegedly sustained in a motor vehicle accident and for which recovery is sought were proximately caused by plaintiff's contributory negligence¹⁶ such as whether the injuries were caused by plaintiff's failure to comply with motor vehicle or traffic laws,¹⁷ and disputed questions material to the issue of contributory negligence,¹⁸ are questions of fact for the determination of the jury or other trier of the facts. Accordingly, under conflicting evidence or evidence subject to different inferences, it is a question of fact for the jury whether plaintiff's negligence was a proximate cause of his injuries where plaintiff was injured while operating a motor vehicle which collided with another motor vehicle traveling in the same or opposite direction on the same street or highway,¹⁹ with another motor ve-

(b) Specific Acts of Negligence

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, the question whether the plaintiff's specific acts of negligence contributed to his injury is one of fact.

Where a specific act of negligence on the part of plaintiff is contended to have caused or contributed to the accident, and the evidence is conflicting or subject to different reasonable inferences, it is a question of fact for the determination of the jury whether the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury was his own specific act of negligence,²⁸ such as plaintiff's negligence in riding in or operating a vehicle in a defective condition²⁹ or without proper lights;³⁰ operating the vehicle at an excessive speed³¹ or riding in a vehicle operated by another at an excessive speed;³² failure to look or to maintain a proper lookout;³³ failure to signal or to give

Use of scales after damage

Petition by grain company for damages, which alleged that its scales were thrown out of adjustment by defendants' driver improperly driving truck across scale platform at an angle, presented question for the jury whether plaintiff company, in continuing to use scale, was guilty of contributory negligence constituting an efficient intervening cause.—Atherton v. Where, in order to exonerate defendant from liability or to lessen his liability, it is alleged that the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury was the negligence of the person operating the vehicle in which plaintiff was a passenger, and there is a conflict in the evidence or the evidence is such that reasonable men may differ in their conclusions therefrom, the question is a question of fact for the determination of the jury.⁶¹ The rule has been applied where the injuries were sustained in a collision between approaching or passing vehicles traveling on the same street or highway,⁶² in a collision between vehicles crossing at an intersection,⁶³ and in a collision between a moving and a stationary vehicle.⁶⁴

Where there is no evidence to show that the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries was the negligence of the person operating the vehicle in which plaintiff was a passenger, or where the evidence pertaining thereto is not substantially conflicting and reasonable minds may reach but one conclusion therefrom, the question is one of law for the court.⁶⁵

§ 523. — Identity

The identity of the motor vehicle involved in the accident, or the driver's identity, is a question of fact for the determination of the jury where the evidence is conflicting or is subject to different reasonable inferences.

Where the evidence is conflicting or is subject to different reasonable inferences, the question of the identity of the motor vehicle involved in the accident,⁶⁶ or the question of the driver's identity,⁶⁷ is a question of fact for the determination of the jury; but, where there is no substantial evidence pertaining to identification or where there is substantial evidence and it is clear and uncontradicted, the question of the identity of the motor vehicle,⁶⁸ or the question of the driver's identity,⁶⁹ is a question of law for the determination of the court.

§ 524. — Ownership

Questions of ownership either of the motor vehicle causing, or the motor vehicle receiving, the injury, are, on conflicting evidence or evidence subject to different reasonable inferences, for the determination of the jury.

Questions of ownership either of the motor vehicle causing,⁷⁰ or the motor vehicle receiving,⁷¹ the injury are, on conflicting evidence or evidence subject to different reasonable inferences, for the jury to determine, but, where no substantial evidence on the matter is introduced or where the evidence is clear and uncontroverted, questions of ownership of the motor vehicle causing⁷² or receiving⁷³ the injury are questions of law for the determination of the court.

defendant's name on a commercial motor vehicle is sufficient to take the question of ownership to the jury,⁷⁴ even though defendant introduces uncontradicted evidence that he is not the owner,⁷⁵ unless the evidence is positive and unequivocal and clearly establishes the fact of nonownership by defendant.⁷⁶

License plates or registration. Evidence of defendant's ownership of the license plates on the motor vehicle,⁷⁷ or registration of the vehicle in his name,⁷⁸ at the time of the accident is sufficient to take to the jury the question whether defendant owned the vehicle at that time, even though the presumption or inference arising from the ownership of the license plates,⁷⁹ or registration of the vehicle,⁸⁰ is rebutted by uncontradicted oral testimony of defendant's witnesses. A question for the jury is not presented if the presumption or inference from the ownership of the license plates,⁸¹ or registration of the vehicle,⁸² is rebutted by positive, uncontradicted, and conclusive proof.

§ 525. — Joint or Several Liability

On conflicting evidence, the question of several or joint liability is for the jury.

Question of concurrent negligence as proximate cause see supra § 522.

Where there is conflicting evidence as to the concurrent negligence of several defendants,⁸³ as to whether the negligence of each or all constitutes a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury,⁸⁴ as to whether several defendants had a joint power of control over the driver of the vehicle,⁸⁵ or as to whether the several defendants were engaged in a common enterprise,⁸⁶ the question of several or joint liability is for the jury under proper instructions by the court. It is for the jury to determine the liability of one of a number of defendants where there is some evidence in the case tending to show his control of the driving by another.⁸⁷

Where no substantial evidence to support joint liability is presented, plaintiff is not entitled to have the question of joint liability submitted to the jury.⁸⁸

Injury caused by guest opening door

Evidence that driver of motor vehicle and his wife were taking occupants of back seat of vehicle for a ride, at time one of such occupants opened back door which struck pedestrian, was insufficient to present jury question whether driver and wife were engaged in a joint mission or a joint enterprise with occupant opening door, so as to make the driver jointly liable with the occupant, since status of parties was that of host and guest.—Landers v. Overaker, Tex.Civ.App., 141 S.W.2d 451, error dismissed, judgment correct.

a. In General

The negligence of the defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle ordinarily is a question of fact for the jury or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury.

The question of defendant's negligence in the operation of his motor vehicle is ordinarily one of fact for the jury or, in trials without a jury, for the court.⁸⁹ Accordingly, negligence is a ques-

Questions of law and fact as to defendant's negligence generally see the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 252, 253, also 45 C.J. p 1279 note 28 et seq.

Negligence is peculiarly jury question in actions for injuries in highway collisions between motor vehicles.—Fox v. McCullough-Gentle Trucking Co., 149 A. 826, 8 N.J. Misc. 282.

Presence or absence of reasonable care is preeminently a jury question—Virginia Ave. Coal Co. v. Bailey, 205 S.W.2d 11, 185 Tenn. 242.

Except in plain and undisputable cases negligence is question for jury.—Speed Oil Co. v. Jones, 1 S.E.2d 760, 59 Ga. App. 625.

Effect of former trial

Where on appeal the evidence at a former trial has been held to present a question of fact for the jury, a submission of the case to the jury at the second trial is required where the evidence is practically the same as at the first.—Clark v. Sweaney, 97 S.E. 474, 176 N.C. 529

Injury to person effecting rescue

Where plaintiff went to rescue of driver and passenger involved in automobile accident, in response to driver's plea for help, and was injured in effecting rescue, whether driver in causing accident was negligent was for jury.—Brugh v. Bogle, 16 N.W.2d 668, 310 Mich. 74, 158 A.L.R. 184

if the evidence is legally insufficient the court may direct a verdict for defendant,⁹⁶ sustain a demurrer to the evidence,⁹⁷ or nonsuit plaintiff.⁹⁸ Evidence which establishes no more than a conjecture or possibility of negligence is insufficient to require submission to the jury.⁹⁹ The negligence of defendant should not be submitted to the jury where the evidence shows plaintiff's contributory negligence as a matter of law.¹

Where the facts are undisputed and the evidence is reasonably susceptible of but a single inference, the question of defendant's negligence is one of law for the court.² Generally, however, it cannot be assumed as a matter of law that certain circumstances do or do not constitute negligence on the part of a motorist.³ Although the case must be very clear to warrant the court in holding a driver to be negligent as a matter of law,⁴ where there is no conflict in the evidence and the evidence proves a clear case of negligence on the part of the operator of an automobile, and where there is no evidence of contributory negligence, it has been held that it is the duty of the court to adjudge a recovery as a matter of law.⁵

The rule that, when an automobile accident is one which ordinarily would not have happened if the motorist had used proper care, the accident affords some evidence that it arose from want of proper care, considered supra § 511, permits the jury, but not the court, to draw an inference of negligence.⁶

Violation of statute or ordinance generally. The violation of a statute or ordinance regulating the operation of a motor vehicle ordinarily does not constitute negligence as a matter of law,⁷ but whether the violation in a given case is or is not negligence is a matter to be determined by the jury.⁸ The neglect of duty imposed by a statute or ordinance is evidence of negligence sufficient to require the question of negligence to be submitted to the jury.⁹ It has been held, however, that where the violation of a statute or ordinance is found by the jury or is undisputed, defendant is deemed guilty of negligence as a matter of law.¹⁰ On conflicting evidence it is for the jury to determine whether defendant violated a statute or ordinance regulating the operation of motor vehicles.¹¹ The question of the applicability of a motor vehicle statute to the case should not be left to the jury.¹² Where a statute declaring what care shall be exercised under certain circumstances is claimed to be applicable, the sole question is whether the conduct in question complies with the statute and the jury may not substitute its own conclusion.¹³

b. Willful, Wanton, or Reckless Acts

On conflicting evidence or where more than one inference reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of willful, wanton, or reckless acts.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of willfulness or wantonness,¹⁴ or whether the defendant in the oper-

Assault and battery

In action of trespass on case by pedestrian who was struck by automobile, where there was no evidence of a willful or intentional trespass by defendant, count in trespass for assault and battery should or recklessness.²¹ Where the evidence is undisputed and but one inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom, it is a question of law for the court as to defendant's willfulness or wantonness²² or gross negligence.²³

c. Equipment and Condition of Vehicle; Lights

In an action for damages for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, the negligence of the defendant with respect to the equipment or condition of his motor vehicle is a question of fact where the evidence is legally sufficient and conflicting or more than one inference may be drawn therefrom.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or more than one inference may be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the jury, or for the court in trials without a jury, whether defendant was guilty of negligence in respect of the equipment or condition of his motor vehicle.²⁴ On the other hand, where there is not sufficient legal evidence to show negligence with respect to the condition or equipment of the vehicle, the case may not be submitted to the jury.²⁵

The above rules have been applied with respect to various kinds of equipment,²⁶ such as brakes,²⁷ rear-view mirror,²⁸ steering apparatus,²⁹ wheels, tires and rims,³⁰ and, likewise, have been applied not have been submitted to the jury, but the jury should have been directed to return a verdict for defendant on the count.

Violation of statute

Where there is proof of occurrence wholly without fault of person charged with violation of statute requiring all motor vehicles to be provided with two sets of brakes in good working order, which made it impossible for such person to comply with requirements of statute and which due care could not have guarded against, whether unintentional violation of statute amounted to actionable negligence is for jury, and it is only where no legal excuse is offered for admitted violation that negligence is established as matter of law.—Lochmoeller v. with respect to equipment such as chains on the tires.³¹ The absence of chains does not, as a matter of law, under ordinary circumstances constitute negligence.³²

Lights. Where the evidence thereon is conflicting or such that different inferences may be drawn therefrom, questions as to negligence with respect to lights on the vehicle,³³ or with respect to their being lit,³⁴ or whether they conformed to the requirements of statutes or ordinances³⁵ are questions of fact. The extent of interference of lights on an oncoming vehicle and the effect of the interference on the conduct of the motorist are usually questions of fact and not of law;³⁶ and ordinarily it is for the jury to determine whether the failure of defendant to dim his lights constituted negligence.³⁷

According to some authorities where it is undisputed that defendant has violated a statute or ordinance with respect to lights on the motor vehicle involved in the accident, negligence exists

as a matter of law,³⁸ but according to other authorities the violation of such regulations is not negligence as a matter of law.³⁹

(1) Control

In an action for damages for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, it is usually for the jury to determine whether the operator had his motor vehicle under control at the time of the accident.

In an action for damages for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, the question whether the driver had his car under control at the time of the accident is usually for the jury,⁴⁰

as is also the question whether defendant, in losing control,⁴¹ or in his use of the emergency brake,⁴² acted negligently. On conflicting evidence, the cause of an operator losing control of the vehicle is a question for the jury.⁴³

There must be sufficient evidence to show that the operator failed to have his motor vehicle under control at the time of the injury in order to justify the submission of the issue to the jury;⁴⁴ the uncontroverted evidence may show absence of negligence as a matter of law.⁴⁵

Skidding. The skidding of a motor vehicle does not constitute negligence on the part of the operator as a matter of law,⁴⁶ but ordinarily is a question for the jury.⁴⁷ Accordingly, the question of the negligence of the operator at the time of the skidding is for the jury, or for the trial court in trials without a jury, where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences can be drawn therefrom.⁴⁸

circumstances existing in the particular case,⁵³ are for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury. The weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses as to speed are for the jury.⁵⁴ Where there is substantial evidence that defendant was driving at an excessive speed at the time of the accident, the fact that such evidence is contradicted by testimony of apparently disinterested witnesses does not justify a directed verdict for defendant.⁵⁵

Under statutes limiting speed to a rate that is safe and reasonable, or careful and prudent, what is a safe and reasonable or careful and prudent speed under the circumstances of a particular case is for the jury;⁵⁶ proof of excessive speed does not, under such statutes, establish negligence as a matter of law.⁵⁷ Where the statute prescribes that driving at a certain rate of speed or less

shall be presumptively lawful or that driving beyond a certain rate of speed shall be presumptively unlawful, the question of the lawfulness of the speed at time of the accident ordinarily is for the jury.⁵⁸ Whether driving at a speed less than that fixed by ordinance was negligent under the circumstances,⁵⁹ or at what distance away from an intersecting road, under the conditions shown to exist, a driver going at a rate otherwise legal should reduce his speed,⁶⁰ is generally a question for the jury.

The rule requiring the submission to the jury of the question of negligent operation of a motor vehicle because of excessive speed where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence has been applied in various situations,⁶¹ as, for example, in cases involving the meeting or collision of ve-

speed is not required, evidence of facts sufficient to justify as inference of negligence being sufficient.⁷⁴

Where the evidence as to speed is uncontradicted and but one inference may be drawn therefrom, the question is one of law;⁷⁵ and where the evidence of defendant's speed is not in conflict and proves a clear case of negligence on his part proximately causing the injury, and there is no proof of contributory negligence, it has been held that the court may adjudge a recovery as a matter of law.⁷⁶ The driver of a motor vehicle on encountering a fog is not bound as a matter of law to stop and wait for the fog to lift in order to escape the charge of negligence.⁷⁷

Violation of speed regulations as negligence. Although, it is undisputed that defendant at the time of the injury was violating a statute or ordinance regulating the speed of motor vehicles, it has been held that negligence does not exist as a matter of law;⁷⁸ but it has also been held that a speed in excess of the speed allowed by law constitutes negligence as a matter of law.⁷⁹

Assured clear distance ahead. Where it is charged that defendant was operating his motor vehicle in violation of a statute providing that no person shall operate a motor vehicle at a speed greater than will permit him to bring the vehicle to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead, it is for the jury, on conflicting evidence or where different inferences may be drawn from the evidence, to determine what was the assured clear distance ahead in a particular case,⁸⁰ whether the operator was driving at a speed which, under the existing circumstances, constituted a violation of the statute,⁸¹ and whether defendant has shown such a state of facts as would excuse him from the operation of the statute.⁸²

Evidence very unsatisfactory

Refusing to submit pedestrian's action for personal injuries on theory of defendant's negligent speed in turning into street was not error, where evidence as to speed in turning movement was very unsatisfactory.—Rhoads v. Herbert, 148 A. 693, 298 Pa. 522.

Place of accident

In action for injury sustained by child who ran into highway before automobile, evidence that accident occurred in residential district, so as to establish that defendant was traveling at excessive speed was insufficient for jury.—Fox v. Barlow, 173 S.E. 43, 206 N.C. 66.

Whether traction company violated statute relating to speed in business districts was question of fact and law not required to be submitted.—Community Traction Co. v. Konte, 172 N.E. 533, 35 Ohio App. 361, affirmed 172 N.E. 442, 122 Ohio St. 514.

Stouffer, Ohio App., 40 N.E.2d 178.

(2) Where evidence as to number of separate dwellings or business houses fronting on street at place of automobile accident was not conflicting, submission of issues whether street was in residence district and permissible speed thereon was error.—Adrian v. Guyette, 58 P.2d 988, 14 Cal App 2d 493.

Speed preventing stop within length of vision. The driving of an automobile at a speed which prevents stopping within the length of vision is not negligence as a matter of law,⁸³ but it may constitute negligence as a matter of fact.⁸⁴ In some jurisdictions it is not negligence as a matter of law to drive at nighttime at such speed as to render it impossible to stop within the distance illuminated by the headlights of the motor vehicle.⁸⁵ In other jurisdictions the operation of a motor vehicle at night at such a speed that it cannot be stopped within the distance illuminated by the headlights is negligence as a matter of law,⁸⁶ although it has been held that such rule is not without exceptions⁸⁷ and does not apply in those cases where reasonable minds may differ on the question of whether or not the operator exercised the care, caution, and prudence required of him under the circumstances of the particular situation,⁸⁸ or where there is evidence from which the jury may find that there were disconcerting circumstances affecting the operator's actions at the time of the collision.⁸⁹

(3) Lookout

In an action for damages for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, the question whether the driver of the vehicle causing the injury was keeping a lookout at the time of the accident ordinarily is one of fact.

Wherever the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether the driver of the vehicle causing the injury was keeping a reasonably careful lookout at the time of the accident.⁹⁰ What is a proper lookout in a given situation, and whether it includes the duty to listen as well as to look, are for the jury.⁹¹ Where, however, the uncontroverted evidence establishes the fact of defendant's duty to keep a lookout at the place of the accident, that he failed to do so and that he could have seen the danger if he had looked in time to have prevented the injury, his negligence and its operation as the proximate cause of the injury are established as matter of law.⁹²

The question whether a driver who looks sees all that he should is one of fact.⁹³ It is generally a question of fact whether a driver of a motor vehicle has been negligent in failing to see an object in the road in front of him in time to avoid striking it; the matter becomes a question of law only in cases where the object in the road is so plainly visible that reasonable minds could not differ as to the duty of the driver to have seen it.⁹⁴ Whether the color of an object so blends with the color of the road that a motorist exercising ordinary care with respect to lookout may not discover it until too close to it to avoid colliding with it or whether the object sufficiently blends with the color of the road to prevent a proper lookout from disclosing its presence in time to avoid a collision is for the jury.⁹⁵

It is not negligence as a matter of law, under all conditions and all circumstances, for the driver of an automobile to go to sleep while he is operating a car.⁹⁶

(4) Horn, Whistle, Bell, or Hand Signals

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn, it is for the jury to determine whether the failure to give warning signals constitutes negligence.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, questions as to whether a warning signal was given,⁹⁷ whether, if it was given, it was an adequate signal under the circumstances,⁹⁸ and whether, if it was not given, such failure was negligence,⁹⁹ are for the jury. Where the evidence on the issue is positive and uncontradicted, it may be held as a matter of law that defendant gave the proper signal,¹ that an obstruction to the view, making it obligatory on defendant under the statute to give a warning, existed,² or that defendant was not negligent.³

Sufficiency of evidence for jury. There must be some evidence in the case tending to show that defendant did not give the proper signal to take that issue to the jury.⁴ Affirmative testimony of a single witness that no signals were given will, however, be sufficient for this purpose.⁵ Negative testimony of plaintiff that he did not hear the signal has been held sufficient for this purpose in the absence of positive evidence that defendant gave such warning.⁶ Where there is in the case negative testimony that the signals were not heard and positive testimony to the effect that they were given, some authorities hold that the conflict carries the issue to the jury,⁷ especially when supplemented by evidence that the witness who testifies he did not hear was listening and could have heard.⁸ Other authorities hold that negative testimony of plaintiff that he did not hear will not take the case to the jury in the face of positive testimony of disinterested witnesses that the signal was given⁹ or in the absence of positive testimony of plaintiff that he was giving heed to passing vehicles and listening for their signals.¹⁰

Hand signals. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom as to whether or not the driver of the vehicle causing the injury gave a proper hand signal at the time of the accident, questions as to whether such signal was given¹¹ and whether a failure to give such signal was negligence¹² are for the jury. Where the case contains testimony by plaintiff that he watched defendant's vehicle and saw no signal and also the testimony of others that the driver gave a signal, the question whether the signal was given is for the jury.¹³

(5) Stopping, Backing, and Turning

In an action for damages for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle, it is for the jury, on conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, to determine whether the defendant in stopping, backing, or turning his vehicle was guilty of negligence.

In an action for damages for injuries due to the operation of a motor vehicle, where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, the question whether defendant was negligent in stopping his car as he did under the circumstances of the particular case is a question for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury.¹⁴

Backing. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, questions are for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, as to whether defendant backed his automobile as alleged,¹⁵ and, if he did so, whether he was guilty of negligence under the circumstances of the particular case.¹⁶

The act of backing a motor vehicle in such manner as to trench on the sidewalk is evidence of negligence, but is not negligence as a matter of law.¹⁷

Turning. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether er defendant was guilty of negligence in turning or changing the course of his vehicle.¹⁸ On such evidence it is for the jury to determine whether defendant was negligent in cutting corners and driving on the wrong side of the street in making a left turn into an intersecting street,¹⁹ or in rounding a curve at the speed and under the circumstances testified to,²⁰ or in making too sharp a turn around another vehicle in the street.²¹ Whether defendant made the turn at a reasonably safe angle is for the jury.²² Where the evidence is conflicting, the question whether defendant had knowledge of plaintiff's car following him at the time he turned his own car across the path of the plaintiff's car is for the jury.²³

There must be some evidence of defendant's negligence in turning or changing the course of his automobile in order to warrant or require submission to the jury.²⁴ Where the entire evidence

(6) Parking or Leaving Vehicle Unattended

The questions whether the defendant was negligent in parking his motor vehicle or leaving it on the highway unattended are for the jury where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, questions whether defendant was negligent in parking his motor vehicle or leaving it in the highway unattended as he did under the circumstances of the particular case are for the jury, or for the trial court in trials without a jury.²⁶ The rule has been applied with respect to negligence as to the place where the vehicle was left or parked,²⁷ the posi-

the case tending to show that defendant was negligent in parking his motor vehicle or leaving it unattended in order to take the issue to the jury, and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to warrant or require submission of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.³⁴ Where the facts are undisputed, on a motion by defendant for a directed verdict, it is for the court to decide whether or not a reasonable mind might conclude that defendant acted as a prudent person would have done under the circumstances.³⁵ The parking of a motor truck within a safety zone for the purpose of being loaded is not negligence as a matter of law.³⁶

e. Conduct Generally in Particular Situations

- (1) In general; acts in emergencies
- (2) Driving on wrong side of road

- (3) Passing vehicles
- (4) Crossing intersections
- (5) Towing and being towed
- (6) Colliding with vehicle parked or at rest

(1) In General; Acts in Emergencies

Where the evidence is conflicting, the question whether the defendant's conduct in particular situations constituted negligence is one of fact.

Defendant's liability where the negligence charged in the operation of a motor vehicle concerns his general conduct in particular situations is a question of fact wherever the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may be reasonably drawn therefrom.³⁷ The evidence must be legally sufficient to justify submission to the jury of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.³⁸ Where the evidence as to defendant's conduct is not contradicted and only a single inference as to whether or not it constituted negligence can reasonably be made therefrom, the case is not a proper one to be submitted to the jury.³⁹

Where a collision occurs on a highway, the negligence of defendant ordinarily is a question for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury.⁴⁰ A motorist is not to be held negligent as a matter of law when his only fault is the failure to avoid a collision under conditions that may not be reasonably anticipated.⁴¹

In cases involving collisions between leading and following vehicles, the questions as to what due care required and whether under the circumstances due care was exercised are for the jury except when reasonable minds may not differ.⁴² On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether the operator of a leading vehicle was negligent in causing injury to the driver of a following vehicle⁴³ or to the driver of a vehicle approaching from the opposite direction.⁴⁴

Acts in emergencies. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant was confronted with an emergency,⁴⁵ the nature and ex-

(2) Driving on Wrong Side of Road

The negligence of the defendant in driving on the wrong side of the road ordinarily is a question for the jury.

The driving of a motor vehicle on the wrong side of the road, or to the left of center of the highway, is not, of itself negligence as a matter of law;⁵¹ but whether such an operation constitutes negligence usually presents a question of fact for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, in connection with other pertinent facts in evidence.⁵² Testimony showing that a driver failed to keep to the right of the center of a highway as required by the rules of the road is sufficient evidence to warrant the court in submitting the case to the jury on the question of the driver's negligence.⁵³ On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury or trial court to determine whether defendant was driving on the wrong side of the road⁵⁴ or which of two motor vehicles was being operated on the wrong side of the road.⁵⁵

The evidence must be legally sufficient to justify submission to the jury of defendant's negligence in driving on the wrong side of the road⁵⁶ or of some question incidental thereto.⁵⁷

(3) Passing Vehicles

- (a) Going in same direction
- (b) Going in opposite directions

(a) Going in Same Direction

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant was negligent in passing or attempting to pass another motor vehicle going in the same direction.

Where evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant in passing or attempting to pass another motor vehicle going in the same direction was guilty of negligence.⁵⁸ On such evidence it is for the jury or trial court to determine as a fact whether defendant was negligent in colliding with the vehicle which he was passing or attempting to pass,⁵⁹ or in forcing such vehicle⁶⁰ or a following vehicle⁶¹ to leave the road, or was negligent in colliding with a car approaching in the opposite direction.⁶² On conflicting evidence it is for the jury to determine whether defendant attempted to pass plaintiff's

car on the right in violation of the regulations⁶³ or whether the collision was caused by plaintiff's turning his car into defendant's, or defendant cutting too short in front of plaintiff's.⁶⁴

The evidence must be legally sufficient to justify submission to the jury of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁶⁵ Where the facts are undisputed and but one inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom, the negligence of defendant is a question of law for the court.⁶⁶ Where the charge of negligence is that defendant attempted to pass another motor vehicle at an intersection contrary to regulations, the question of whether or not the streets were intersecting at the place of the accident is a question of law.⁶⁷

(b) Going in Opposite Directions

The negligence of the defendant in passing another automobile going in the opposite direction is a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant motorist in passing another automobile going in the opposite direction was guilty of negligence.⁶⁸ On such evidence it is for the jury or trial court to determine as a fact whether defendant was negligent in colliding with an automobile going in the opposite direction⁶⁹ or in forcing such automobile

Directed verdict held proper

Where undisputed proof showed that defendant sounded horn as he was about to pass plaintiff, who suddenly turned to left to enter driveway, directed verdict for defendant was required.—Spice v. Kuzman, 239 N.W. 497, 206 Wis. 293.

Circumstantial evidence

Where plaintiff has shown by his testimony, in action involving head-on automobile collision, the existence of a cause which might produce an accident, and that an accident of that particular type did occur, and there is an absence of showing of any other cause, plaintiff has made his case for the jury, even though his proof is solely by circumstantial evidence.—Younger Bros. v. Defendant's statement made after accident that he did not see approaching automobile was for jury on question of defendant's negligence.—Cross v. Cohen, 9 N.Y.S.2d 43, 256 App.Div. 891, reargument denied 11 N.Y.S.2d 549, 256 App.Div. 1056, appeal denied.

Existence of marks on highway after collision, and significance of those marks, were questions for er defendant was driving his car on the wrong or right side of the road, or beyond the center of the highway, at the time of the accident,⁷³ whether the vehicles actually collided,⁷⁴ whether defendant was driving without lights⁷⁵ or dimmed his lights,⁷⁶ whether defendant stopped his motor vehicle after the accident,⁷⁷ whether an emergency existed excusing defendant's failure to turn to the right,⁷⁸ or whether conditions existed making it impossible for defendant to turn to the right.⁷⁹

There must be some evidence of defendant's negligence in passing another automobile going in the opposite direction in order to warrant or require submission of his negligence to the jury, and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to justify submission of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁸⁰ Where the evidence is uncontradicted, and but one inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom, it is for the court to find as matter of law on what side of the road the accident occurred,⁸¹ the speed of the vehicles,⁸² which car struck the other,⁸³ and, where the facts justify it, that defendant was negligent.⁸⁴ Where the evidence is equally consistent with the existence or nonexistence of negligence on the part of defendant, the question should not be left to the jury.⁸⁵ Where the facts are undisputed and the only inference to be reasonably drawn therefrom is defendant's absence of negligence, the court is justified in giving a peremptory instruction for defendant.⁸⁶

(4) Crossing Intersections

On conflicting evidence, as where more than one inference may be drawn from the evidence, it is a question for the jury to determine whether the defendant was guilty of negligence in approaching, entering, or passing through an intersection.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant was guilty of negligence in approaching, entering, or passing through an intersection.⁸⁷ On such evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court, in trials without a jury, to determine whether defendant was guilty of negligence in colliding with a vehicle approaching, or at, an intersection,⁸⁸ or in causing a vehicle approaching, or at, an intersection to overturn or to leave the road.⁸⁹ The weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses are for the jury.⁹⁰ The fact that a motorist has the right of way at an intersection does not warrant a holding as a matter of law that he was free from negligence in exercising his right;⁹¹ in the absence of unusual circumstan-

es the question whether defendant who had the right of way was negligent is a question of fact rather than of law.⁹²

On conflicting evidence or where more than one inference may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, incidental questions are also for the jury, or for the trial court in trials without a jury,⁹³

at or near the intersection before his negligence may be submitted to the jury, and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to require or warrant the submission of defendant's negligence, or of some question incidental thereto, to the jury.¹⁷ Where the evidence is not conflicting and reasonable minds can reach but one conclusion, defendant's negligence is a question of law for the court.¹⁸ Defendant will be held negligent as a matter of law where the evidence is uncontradicted and the fact of negligence is the only inference which can reasonably be drawn therefrom.¹⁹

(5) Towing and Being Towed

Whether the defendant was guilty of negligence while engaged in towing another automobile or vehicle or in driving an automobile which was being towed is a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant was guilty of some negligent act while engaged in towing another automobile or vehicle,²⁰ or in driving a car which was itself being towed.²¹

On such evidence it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether the driver of an automobile was negligent when a pedestrian tripped over a tow rope or chain strung between the vehicles,²² or where an automobile struck a tow rope or cable stretched across the road,²³ or where the object being towed became detached.²⁴ On such evidence incidental questions are also for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury,²⁵ such as whether there were lights on the vehicle.²⁶

There must be sufficient evidence of defendant's negligence while engaged in towing another vehicle or while being towed, and in various cases

the evidence has been held insufficient to warrant or require submission of defendant's negligence to the jury.²⁷

(6) Colliding with Vehicle Parked or at Rest

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was negligent in colliding with a vehicle parked or at rest.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is in conflict or different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in colliding with a motor vehicle²⁸ or was guilty of

cle.³⁶ The weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses are for the jury.³⁷ On conflicting evidence or where more than one inference reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, incidental or related questions are also for the jury,³⁸ such as the question whether there was room for the automobile to pass between the pedestrian and the curb³⁹ and the time, place, and manner of the pedestrian's injury.⁴⁰

There must be legally sufficient evidence of defendant's negligence in striking a pedestrian, and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to require or warrant submission to the jury of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁴¹ Testimony that a driver failed to sound his horn, without proof of a necessity therefor, does not make a submissible case.⁴² It cannot be held, as a matter of law in every case, that a motor vehicle driver is absolved from giving a signal on approaching a pedestrian on a highway on the theory that the pedestrian saw the vehicle immediately prior to the collision.⁴³

(b) Walking along Highway

The negligence of the defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle in causing injury to a pedestrian walking along the highway is a question for the jury on conflicting evidence or where more than one inference may be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant in operating a motor vehicle was guilty of negligence in causing injury to a pedestrian walking along a highway,⁴⁴ as by striking him with his vehicle,⁴⁵ or

Pedestrian slipping in pool of oil

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff who slipped and fell in pool of oil which resulted from collision of automobiles, where there was no evidence to show manner in which collision occurred or that collision was result of negligence of either driver, judgment of nonsuit was proper.—Cowen v. Katz, 197 A. 516, 130 Pa.Super. 337.

Pedestrian suddenly turning back

Evidence that pedestrian had started across street at intersection and suddenly turned back when progress was temporarily blocked by traffic and was struck by automobile that had received direction from traffic officer to proceed was insufficient to take question of negligence of motorist to jury.—Stafford v. Jones, 198 N.E. 745, 292 Mass. 489.

Lights on vehicle

Where several witnesses testified that lights of automobile were burning before automobile struck pedestrian, pedestrian's testimony that he saw no lights on automobile until after he was struck did not require submission to jury whether lights were burning before collision.—Besser v. uncontradicted and no inference of negligence on the part of defendant can reasonably be made therefrom, it has been held that defendant is not negligent as matter of law.⁷³ Where the evidence shows plaintiff's contributory negligence as a matter of law, it has been held to be error to submit defendant's negligence to the jury.⁷⁴ The failure of a driver to sound his horn on approaching an intersecting street, as required by ordinance, should not be submitted to the jury where the ordinance was not in evidence.⁷⁵ The fact that a pedestrian is crossing a street at a place other than a crosswalk when he is struck by a motorist does not as a matter of law acquit the motorist of a charge of negligence.⁷⁶

(d) Standing or Sitting upon Highway

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant was guilty of negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle in causing injury to a pedestrian standing or sitting on the highway.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle was guilty of negligence in causing injury to a pedestrian standing or sitting on the highway,⁷⁷ as where the pedestrian was struck by defendant's motor vehicle⁷⁸ or he was struck by another vehicle as a result of defendant's negligent operation of a motor vehicle.⁷⁹ On such evidence incidental questions are also for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried

(c) On Sidewalk

On conflicting evidence or where more than one inference may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle was guilty of negligence in causing injuries to a pedestrian on the sidewalk.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, whether defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle was guilty of negligence in causing injuries to a pedestrian on the sidewalk,⁸⁵ as where the pedestrian was struck by defendant's motor vehicle⁸⁶ or he was struck by another vehicle as a result of defendant's negligent operation of a motor vehicle.⁸⁷ On such evidence incidental questions are also for the jury or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury,⁸⁸ such as the pedestrian's position on the sidewalk at the time of the accident.⁸⁹

There must be legally sufficient evidence of defendant's negligence to warrant or require submission to the jury, and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to justify submission of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁹⁰

jury.²⁵ On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn, incidental questions also are for the jury or trial court,²⁶ as, for example, whether defendant struck the bicyclist,²⁷ the point of actual contact between plaintiff's bicycle and defendant's automobile,²⁸ whether defendant's motor vehicle was being operated on the wrong side of the road,²⁹ whether defendant saw or might have seen plaintiff in time to have avoided the accident,³⁰ and whether defendant's car made certain skid marks on the street to which the witness testified.³¹

The evidence must be legally sufficient to warrant or require submission to the jury of the question of defendant's negligence to the jury, or the submission of some question incidental thereto.³² On the other hand, where there is any negligence proved on the part of defendant, or if there are any facts in the case from which negligence of defendant may be legitimately inferred, or if the proofs on the question of contributory negligence are doubtful, motions for nonsuit and directed verdict are properly denied.³³

(5) Motorcyclists

The negligence of the defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle in causing injury to a motorcyclist is a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing injury to a motorcyclist,³⁴ as where injury resulted from a collision between defendant's motor vehicle and the motorcyclist.³⁵ The weight of the evidence

- (d) Railroad cars or streetcars

(a) In General

The negligence of the defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle in causing injury to an occupant or guest of another motor vehicle is a question to be determined by the jury where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing injury to a guest or occupant of another motor vehicle⁴¹ by colliding with such motor vehicle.⁴² On such evidence incidental questions also are for the jury or trial court,⁴³ as, for example, whether defendant was driving on the wrong side of the road.⁴⁴

(b) Horse-Drawn Vehicles

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may be drawn therefrom, whether the defendant was guilty of negligence in colliding with a horse-drawn vehicle is a question of fact.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle was guilty of negligence in causing damage to a horse-drawn vehicle or injury to the driver or occupant thereof,⁴⁵ as by colliding with such vehicle.⁴⁶ The weight of the evidence is for the jury.⁴⁷ Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn, incidental questions also are

for the jury,⁴⁸ as, for example, whether the operator of the automobile observed the precautions required by statute under such circumstances,⁴⁹ whether the accident occurred in the daytime or nighttime,⁵⁰ whether plaintiff's wagon was struck by defendant's automobile from the rear or side,⁵¹ and whether plaintiff gave defendant warning of his approach and sufficient space to pass.⁵²

The evidence must be legally sufficient to justify submission to the jury of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁵³

(c) Vehicles Used in Saving Life or Property or Enforcing Law

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant in the operation of a motor vehicle, was negligent in causing damage or injury to a vehicle used in saving life or property or in enforcing the law or to the driver or occupant thereof.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing damage or injury to a vehicle used in saving life or property or in enforcing the law or to the driver or occupant thereof.⁵⁴ Thus on such evidence it is for the jury or trial court to determine whether defendant was negligent in colliding with an ambulance,⁵⁵ fire truck or vehicle,⁵⁶ or police car,⁵⁷ or in causing such vehicles to swerve causing injury to the occupants⁵⁸ or a third person.⁵⁹ On such evidence incidental questions also are for the jury or trial court⁶⁰ as, for example, whether the driver of the automobile heard the warning siren or bell.⁶¹

(d) Railroad Cars or Streetcars

Whether the defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing damage to a railroad car or streetcar or injury to an occupant thereof is a jury question where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is in conflict or different inferences reasonably may be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury, or the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing damage to a streetcar or injury to an occupant thereof.⁶² On such evidence it is for the jury or trial court to determine whether defendant was negligent in colliding with a streetcar and injuring an employee of the streetcar company or passenger therein,⁶³ or in causing another vehicle to collide with a streetcar causing injury,⁶⁴ or whether defendant was negligent in causing damage to a railroad car or injury to an employee or occupant thereof⁶⁵ by colliding with such car.⁶⁶ On such evidence incidental questions also are for the jury or trial court.⁶⁷

The evidence must be legally sufficient to require or warrant submission to the jury and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to justify submission to the jury of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁶⁸ Where the evidence is undisputed and not more than one inference reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, defendant's negligence is a question of law;⁶⁹ where the only inference from undisputed facts shows that defendant was not negligent, the court may so declare as a matter of law.⁷⁰

(7) Persons in Charge of Animals

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing injury to persons in charge of animals.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing injury to persons in charge of animals,⁷¹ as by striking such persons⁷² or in striking the animal which in turn strikes the person in charge.⁷³

the evidence is reasonably sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff, a directed verdict for defendant is improper.⁹⁶ A motorist is not negligent as a matter of law in releasing the brakes after striking a child where his purpose is to avoid further injury to the child.⁹⁷

(9) Persons under Disability

The question of the defendant's negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle in causing injury to a person under disability is for the jury on conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing injury to persons under disability⁹⁸ by striking such persons⁹⁹ upon the street or highway.¹ On such evidence incidental questions also are for the jury or the trial court,² as, for example, whether plaintiff was actually struck by defendant's automobile.³ The evidence must be legally sufficient to require or warrant submission to the jury of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁴

(10) Persons Emerging from behind Obstructions

Where the evidence is conflicting, whether the defendant was guilty of negligence in causing injury to a person emerging from behind an obstruction is a question of fact.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was negligent in causing injury to a person emerging from behind an obstruction.⁵ On such evidence incidental questions also are for the jury or trial court.⁶

(11) Guests or Occupants of Vehicle Owned or Operated by Defendant

Where the evidence is conflicting or more than one inference may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant, in the operation of his motor vehicle, was guilty of such acts or omissions, such as negligence or gross negligence, as will impose liability for injuries to a guest or occupant of the motor vehicle.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of his motor vehicle, was, with respect to guests or occupants of his vehicle, guilty of such acts or omissions as will impose liability.⁷ On such evidence it is for the jury or the trial court to determine whether defendant was guilty of negligence,⁸ and, likewise, if such questions

(2) Fact that automobile was operated at from sixty to seventy miles an hour would have important bearing in connection with other facts on question whether operator was guilty of willful, wanton, reckless, or grossly negligent conduct, but it could not be ruled as matter of law that that fact alone constituted such conduct of either kind or prima facie evidence of such conduct.—Kohutynski v. Kohutynski, 5 N.E.2d 345, 296 Mass. 74.

Under statute

(1) Some statutes expressly provide that question of gross negligence or willful or wanton misconduct "shall in all cases be solely for the jury"—Erlachstein v. Roney, 20 So.2d 254, 155 Fla. 333—Wharton v. Day, 10 So.2d 417, 151 Fla. 772—Winthrop v. Carlinhas, 195 So. 399, 142 Fla. 588.

(2) Provision does not constitute unconstitutional attempt on part of legislature to exercise judicial power, since such provision does not prevent courts from passing on legal sufficiency of evidence, but is merely surplusage and adds nothing to power of jury that jury did not already possess.—Cormier v. Williams, 4 So.2d 525, 148 Fla. 201.

(3) It is within province of court to determine whether or not facts alleged, if proved, would constitute gross negligence.—Koger v. Hollahan, 198 So. 685, 144 Fla. 779, 131 A.L.R. 886.

(4) Evidence that automobile was driven on well-lighted bridge at speed of about thirty miles per hour, that driver was familiar with bridge, that lighted signs reading "slow" and "15 miles per hour" were visible, that lights of approaching automobile blinded driver, and that automobile collided with iron guard at end of safety island on which was burning red light, did not as matter of law establish either gross negligence or willful and wanton misconduct of driver, under automobile guest statute requiring submission of such issues to jury.—Winthrop v. Carlinhas, supra.

Law of another state

Jury could find under evidence that laws of another state governing the action permitted recovery for place of the accident, whether at or between intersections,²² who was driving the motor vehicle,²³ the party having the right of way,²⁴ which of two cars was actually driven against the other,²⁵ whether defendant observed the law of the road,²⁶ the speed of defendant's automobile,²⁷ the relative speed of two cars,²⁸ whether plaintiff had protested defendant's rate of speed,²⁹ whether defendant knew that the injured person was riding on the running board,³⁰ whether defendant's car or the car with which it collided was on the wrong side of the road,³¹ whether it was dark at the time of the accident,³² whether defendant was driving without lights,³³ and whether defendant was blinded by the lights of an approaching car.³⁴

In addition, on such evidence it is for the jury, or trial court, to determine the status of the occupant of the motor vehicle,³⁵ such as a guest,³⁶ invitee,³⁷ or trespasser,³⁸ whether defendant was conscious of the peril in which a trespasser was placed a sufficient time before the accident to have pre-automobile driver's simple negligence toward invitee.—Askowith v. Mas-sell, 156 N.E. 875, 260 Mass. 202.

The court may declare defendant negligent as a matter of law and direct a verdict for plaintiff where on undisputed evidence his negligence as the proximate cause of the injury is the only possible inference and there is no evidence showing that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence;⁶⁰ and under like circumstances the court may declare defendant guilty of gross negligence and direct a verdict for plaintiff.⁶¹ It has been held that defendant is not entitled to a directed verdict on the strength of the guest's testimony which, if true, would establish that defendant was not negligent, where the testimony of the guest is contradicted.⁶² Whether the evidence is sufficient to justify a finding of gross negligence is for the court.⁶³ The fact that a person has been drinking intoxicating liquor and thereafter drives his car in a negligent manner does not show as a matter of law that he was driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.⁶⁴

Where the evidence is uncontradicted and reasonable minds can reach but one conclusion, incidental questions are for the court as a matter of law,⁶⁵ as, for example, the status of the occupant of the motor vehicle,⁶⁶ whether a guest,⁶⁷ or wheth-

g. Injuries to Persons or Property Not upon Highway

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing injuries or damage to persons or property not on the highway.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or more than one inference reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence in causing injuries or damage to a person who is not on the highway⁷⁰ or to prop-

The evidence must be legally sufficient to warrant or require submission to the jury, and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to justify submission to the jury of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁷⁴ Where the evidence is undisputed and not more than one inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom, defendant's negligence is a question of law.⁷⁵ The court may declare defendant not negligent as a matter of law where from the undisputed evidence it can only be reasonably inferred that defendant was free from negligence.⁷⁶

h. Injuries to Animals

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence resulting in injuries to animals belonging to the plaintiff.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant, in the operation of a motor vehicle, was guilty of negligence resulting in injuries to animals belonging to plaintiff.⁷⁷ On such evidence incidental ques-

Dog.

(1) Extent to which motorist may rely on dog's intelligence and agility to avoid injury by automobile is question for triers of fact.—Jones v. Craddock, 187 S.E. 558, 210 N.C. 429—42 C.J. p. 1063 note 50 [a].

(2) In action against motorist for negligently killing dog, question of negligence was for jury where testimony of plaintiff was that dog stood in street near curb of wide and unobstructed street free from traffic, and that motorist without swerving

tions also are for the jury or trial court,⁷⁸ as, for example, whether the road on which the animal was injured was a public road.⁷⁹ The evidence must be legally sufficient to require or warrant submission to the jury of the question of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁸⁰

i. Injuries Resulting from Articles Projecting, Falling, or Thrown from Vehicle

The negligence of the defendant ordinarily is a question for the jury where injury results from articles projecting or falling from his motor vehicle.

The negligence of defendant ordinarily is a question for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, where injury is caused by articles projecting⁸¹ or falling⁸² from his motor vehicle. On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn, incidental questions also are for the jury or trial court,⁸³ as, for example, whether at the time of the accident there were lights burning on the article projecting.⁸⁴ The evidence must be legally sufficient to justify submission to the jury of defendant's negligence or of some question incidental thereto.⁸⁵

j. Injuries Caused by Vehicles Used in Saving Life or Property or Enforcing Law

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the driver of a motor vehicle used in saving life or property or in enforcing the law was guilty of negligence in the operation of the vehicle.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether the driver of a motor vehicle used in saving life or property or in enforcing the law was guilty of negligence in the operation of the vehicle.⁸⁶ On such evi-

(1) In General

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine questions of fact with respect to whether defendant is liable for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle by a third person.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or more than one inference reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine questions of fact with respect to whether defendant is liable for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle by a third person.⁹⁵ On such evidence it is for the jury or trial court to determine as a question in response to signal indicating probability of air raid entered street intersection against red traffic light without being able to ascertain whether traffic was approaching from his right and collided with another automobile killing driver, whether chief was in good faith attempting to comply with superior officer's order to report at headquarters as quickly as possible and hence was entitled to statutory immunity from liability for driver's death was for jury.—Jankowski v. Welch, 52 A.2d 771, 135 N.J.Law 437.

Negative testimony of motorist and of witness that they heard no siren sufficed to make question whether warning was sounded, for jury, where fire chief testified that he sounded siren continuously.—Raynor v. City of Arcata, 77 P.2d 1054, 11 Cal.2d 113.

93. Whether defendant ambulance operators forfeited right of way at intersection by their unlawful speed was for jury under evidence.—Echols v. Vinson, 124 So. 510, 220 Ala. 229.

94. Evidence held insufficient for jury of fact the relationship existing between the owner of the vehicle and the person operating it at the time of the accident,⁹⁶ whether at the time of the accident defendant was in control of the vehicle or its operator,⁹⁷ whether defendant owner riding in the vehicle participated in the management or driving of the vehicle,⁹⁸ or whether defendant and the operator of the vehicle were engaged in a joint enterprise,⁹⁹ and whether at the time of the accident the operator was acting in pursuance of the joint enterprise.¹

The evidence must be legally sufficient to warrant or require submission to the jury, and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to charge defendant with responsibility for injury resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle by a third person.² Where the evidence is undisputed and but one inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom, the question of defendant's liability for injury resulting from the operation of the vehicle by a third person is a question of law for the court.³ Where the presumption, flowing from proof of ownership of the motor vehicle involved, that the owner was in possession and control is rebutted by uncontradicted evidence, the question of the owner's liability generally is a question of law for the court,⁴ although in some cases the question has been held to be one of fact for the jury.⁵

(2) Servant or Agent

Where the evidence is conflicting or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the person operating the motor vehicle causing the injury was the defendant's servant or agent.

inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom it is a question of law for the court whether the person operating the motor vehicle causing the injury was defendant's servant or agent;¹² where on undisputed evidence the only reasonable inference is that such person is not defendant's servant or agent at the time of the accident the court may so declare as a matter of law.¹³ It is usually a question of law for the court where the contract claimed to have established the relation is in writing.¹⁴

Effect of presumptions. The presumption of the agency of the operator of the motor vehicle causing the injury arising from proof of defendant's ownership of the vehicle, considered supra § 509, has been held sufficient, in the absence of rebutting evidence, to make a prima facie case for the jury.¹⁵ Where the evidence in rebuttal of the presumption of agency of the operator flowing from proof of defendant's ownership of the motor vehicle is contradicted, or different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, the issue of agency is for the jury;¹⁶ but where the evidence rebutting the presumption of agency is undisputed

High school principal and students

In action for death caused by automobile, evidence that high school principal permitted three minor students to be absent from school, that he gave them voucher on student body funds for gasoline which the students were to use on automobile trip to advertise carnival sponsored by civic organizations to raise funds to purchase high school band uniforms, and that he gave them letter to principals of other high schools, was insufficient for jury on issue of existence of relationship of principal and agent between principal and students—Hathaway v. Sinkiyoun Union High School Dist., 151 P.2d 861, 68 Cal.App.2d 103.

Partnership

(1) Partner's statements in deposition were insufficient to take to jury question whether automobile driver was engaged in partnership business at time of accident.—Caswell v. Maplewood Garage, 149 A. 746, 84 N.H. 241, 73 A.L.R. 433.

(2) Where liability for personal injuries and property damage resulting from collision between plaintiffs' automobile and truck driven by another was predicated on partnership of truck driver's alleged employers, and proof showed ownership of tract of land by defendants but that only one of them was engaged in removing timber from land for his own exclusive profit and had alone employed truck driver, direction of verdict for person having no interest in profits was proper, since facts showed that there existed no partnership.—Garrett v. Roy Sturgis Lumber Co., 146 S.W.2d 701, 201 Ark. 752.

Requesting postponement on ground of surprise

In action for injuries sustained in collision with automobile, direction of verdict for owner of automobile because of failure to show driver's agency where plaintiff objected because of surprise was not error, where plaintiff did not request postponement.—Forbstein v. and but one inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom, it is generally a question of law for the court.¹⁷ In some jurisdictions, however, the presumption or inference of agency as drawn from proof of ownership of the vehicle is sufficient to warrant submission to the jury although the evidence in rebuttal is uncontradicted.¹⁸

Under some statutes providing that proof that at the time of the accident the motor vehicle was registered in the name of defendant as owner constitutes prima facie evidence that the motor vehicle was then being operated by, and under the control of, a person for whose conduct defendant is legally responsible, and that absence of such responsibility is an affirmative defense to be set up in the answer and proved by defendant, submis-

Prospective purchaser of motor vehicle

In action by occupant of automobile against dealer for injuries sustained in collision between automobile in which occupant was riding and dealer's automobile which was being driven by a prospective purchaser with dealer's permission, where pleadings and proof established that status between dealer and prospective purchaser was that of bailor and bailee, proof that dealer owned automobile was insufficient evidence for jury on issue of agency between dealer and prospective purchaser.—Brown v. Fields, 83 P.2d 144, 160 Or. 23.

Defendant's name on vehicle

(1) Presence of defendant's name on a commercial vehicle raises presumption that vehicle is owned by defendant and that the operator is defendant's servant acting within scope of his employment, and this presumption is sufficient to take case to jury, even though defendant produces uncontradicted evidence that the operator was not his employee or that he did not own the vehicle.

U.S.—Young v. Wilky Carrier Corporation, D.C.Pa., 54 F.Supp. 912, affirmed, C.C.A., 150 F.2d 764, certiorari denied 66 S.Ct. 470, 326 U.S. 786, 90 L.Ed. 477.

(2) Case will not be submitted to jury where plaintiff himself shows that vehicle did not belong to defendant or was not being used in his business or where defendant, in the testimony produced, can point to evidence of "indisputable physical conditions" or "facts" or where he can show in the evidence some indisputable basis for "mathematical tests" which demonstratively overcome the presumption in plaintiff's favor, or where, in addition to the uncontradicted oral evidence on the side of defendant showing no liability, there is admittedly genuine or unattacked documentary evidence which relieves defendant from the possibility of liability.—*Readshaw v. (3) Fact that truck striking plaintiff was operated after business away from warehouse was not physical condition or basis for mathematical test overcoming presumed operation by defendant.—Talarico v. Baker Office Furniture Co., 149 A. 883, 298 Pa. 211.

(4) Blank showing delivery of desk by driver of truck striking plaintiff after business hours was insufficient documentary evidence to relieve owner from possible liability.—Talarico v. Baker Office Furniture Co., supra.

sion to the jury in most instances is required to determine the question whether the prima facie evidence resulting from proof of registration has been overcome and whether the affirmative defense has been made out so as to rebut the otherwise conclusive effect of the prima facie case.¹⁹ It is rarely that it can be ruled as a matter of law that an affirmative defense has been made out or that a prima facie case has been overcome.²⁰ Nevertheless in some instances the issue has been withdrawn from the jury.²¹

(3) Scope of Employment

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences

reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant's servant or agent driving the motor vehicle causing the injury was, at the time of the accident, acting within the scope of his employment.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant's servant or agent driving the motor vehicle causing the injury was, at the time of the accident, acting within the scope of his employment.²² The weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses are for the jury.²³ Where it is doubtful whether a servant was acting within the scope of his authority, the question should be submitted to the jury.²⁴ Where it appears that the driver of defendant's automobile had taken the car for a double purpose, one of which was a purpose of his own and the other a purpose connected with defendant's business, the question as to which purpose was the dominant or principal purpose of the trip is a question of fact for the jury.²⁵

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences reasonably may be drawn, incidental questions also are for the jury or trial court,²⁶ as, for example, whether defendant's salesman was assigned to the route on which the accident occurred,²⁷ whether the servant had the authority, expressed or implied, to engage another servant,²⁸ whether defendant's servant was authorized to carry passengers or guests,²⁹ whether defendant prohibited his servant from carrying passengers or guests,³⁰ and whether defendant waived his rule forbidding his servant to carry passengers or guests.³¹

The evidence must be legally sufficient to require or warrant submission to the jury of the issue of scope of employment,³² and in various cases the

Parking vehicle

(1) Act of salesman in parking his automobile along highway was not such an act as would take him outside of his employment as matter of law, nor is it such an act as might not have been reasonably expected of traveling salesman driving long distances on his employer's business and to which therefore master's assent may be fairly assumed.—Dollinar v. Pedone, 146 P.2d 237, 63 Cal. App.2d 169.

(2) Where salesman parked his automobile on wrong side of highway at night to assist third persons in distress, court could not hold as matter of law that, because act of mercy itself was not within scope of his employment, act of parking was also outside employment, and question whether in so parking automobile and assisting third persons salesman was acting within his employment, so as to make employer liable for injuries resulting when salesman's automobile was struck, was for jury.—Dollinar v. evidence has been held insufficient to justify submission to the jury of the issue whether defendant's servant or agent was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident³³ or of questions incidental thereto.³⁴ Where the evidence is undisputed and but one inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom, it is a question of law for the court whether defendant's servant or agent was acting within the scope of his employment;³⁵ where on undisputed evidence the only reasonable inference is that the servant or agent was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident the court may so declare as a matter of law.³⁶

Deviation from course of employment. Whether there has been a deviation so material or substantial as to constitute a complete departure usually is a question of fact,³⁷ but where the conclusion is to be drawn from the nature and extent of the deviation is not doubtful, the question is one of law.³⁸

Where deviation from the course of his employment by the servant is slight and not unusual, the court may, as a matter of law, find that the servant was still executing his master's business.³⁹ On the other hand, if the deviation is very marked and unusual the court may determine that the servant was not on the master's business.⁴⁰ Cases falling between these extremes will be regarded as involving a question of fact for the determination of the jury;⁴¹ where the deviation is uncertain in extent and degree, or where the surrounding facts and circumstances leave room for legitimate inferences as to whether or not, notwithstanding the deviation, the servant may still be engaged in the master's business within the scope of his general employment, the question is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury.⁴² Where there has been a deviation or departure from the master's business and the scope of the servant's employment, and where such personal purpose and benefit have been fully accomplished and the servant is in the process of returning to the sphere of his master's business, the question as to whether he was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury is a question for the jury.⁴³

Effect of presumptions. The presumption that defendant's servant or agent was acting in the scope of his employment arising from proof that the motor vehicle was owned by defendant and was being operated by one of his servants or agents at the time of the accident, considered supra § 511 (6) d, is sufficient to take the issue of scope of employment to the jury,⁴⁴ although it has been held that evidence that the driver of a motor vehicle was in the general employ of defendant at the time of the accident and that defendant owned the vehicle is not sufficient, in the absence of other evidence, to carry to the jury the issue whether the driver was acting within the scope of his employment.⁴⁵

Where the evidence in rebuttal of the presumption is itself contradicted, or different inferences reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, the question is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury;⁴⁶ but where the rebuttal evidence is undisputed and but one inference reasonably may be drawn therefrom it is generally a question of law for the court.⁴⁷ In some jurisdictions, however, the presumption or infer-

Ordinarily jury question

Or.—Ellenberger v. Fremont Land Co., 107 P.2d 837, 165 Or. 375.

Where controverting testimony is that of disinterested witnesses, case is for jury where such testimony itself is controverted and impeached, or if it is not free from inherent improbabilities or it is not so clear and convincing that but one conclusion could be drawn from it.—Ehason v. Gail, 132 P.2d 158, 114 Mont. 97.

Essentials for directed verdict

(1) In order to warrant directed verdict for employer who admitted ownership of truck, presumption that driver was acting within scope of employment at time of collision must have been overcome by uncontradicted proof to contrary.—Fullmer v. Scott-Powell Dairies, 166 A. 129, 111 N.J.Law 44.

(2) Defendant, offering proof to contrary, was not entitled to directed verdict, unless such proof was uncontradicted in all material respects, free from inherent improbabilities, and so clear and convincing that but one conclusion could be drawn from its consideration.—Claxton v. Page, 124 P.2d 977, 190 Okl. 422.

Consideration on demurrer of facts raising presumption

Although presumption that driver was acting in scope of employment at time of accident arising from proof of ownership of automobile by defendant and that driver was in defendant's general employ may be overcome on appearance in evidence of facts themselves, evidence which gave rise to such presumption remains in the case for consideration of trial court on demurrer.—State ex rel. Waters v. Hostetter, 126 S.W.2d 1164, 344 Mo. 443, mandate of Supreme Court conformed to Waters v. Hays, App., 130 S.W.2d 220.

ence that a servant or agent was acting within the scope of his employment arising from proof of ownership of the vehicle and operation by the agent or servant is not destroyed or overcome as a matter of law because it is contradicted by defendant's evidence, but the issue remains one of fact for the determination of the jury,⁴⁸ for the reason that, as sole judges of the weight of the evidence and credibility of the witnesses, the jury are not bound to accept such testimony as true, but may, if not convinced thereby, reject any portion or the whole thereof;⁴⁹ and it has been held that the case is for the jury where the evidence controverting the presumption comes from interested witnesses.⁵⁰

(4) Independent Contractor

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the operator of a motor vehicle was employed by the defendant or was an independent contractor.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, whether the person operating the motor vehicle was employed by defendant or was an independent contractor.⁵¹ On such evidence it is for the jury or trial court to determine whether

Undisputed evidence of driver's deviation from scope of employment overcomes inference arising from evidence of employer's ownership of vehicle and general employment of driver that he was acting within scope of his employment at time of collision, and there is nothing to submit to jury, whether evidence of such deviation is introduced during plaintiff's or defendant's case—Reichard v. Red Cab Co., 16 Ohio Supp. 3.

Evidence on cross-examination

Plaintiff's uncontroverted evidence, brought out on cross-examination rebutting presumption of minor son's agency to drive father's automobile, was subject to demurrer to the evidence—Carder v. Martin, 250 P. 906, 120 Okl. 178.

Only in exceptional cases can court say as matter of law that inference or presumption that driver of motor vehicle belonging to another is other's servant, and that vehicle is being used for other's purposes, has been overcome by force and effect of other evidence.—Ellenberger v. Fremont Land Co., 107 P.2d 837, 165 Or. 375.

Additional evidence in aid of presumption

If there is no evidence for plaintiff except bare minimum required to support presumption that driver of automobile involved in accident was acting in scope of employment arising from proof of ownership of automobile by defendant and that driver was in defendant's general employ, if such presumption is destroyed underlying evidence alone will not be enough to make prima facie case for jury, but if there is other evidence, it may aid that required to raise presumption—State ex rel Waters v. Hostetter, 126 S.W.2d 1164, 344 Mo. 443, mandate of Supreme Court conformed to Waters v. Hays, App., 130 S.W.2d 220.

tractor, the liability of defendant for such acts is a question to be submitted to the jury where the evidence is conflicting or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence.⁵⁴

The evidence must be legally sufficient to justify submission to the jury, and in various cases the evidence has been held insufficient to take to the jury the question whether the operator of a motor vehicle was an independent contractor,⁵⁵ or whether the relationship of employer and employee existed,⁵⁶ or whether the driver of a towing car was the employee of the owner of the car being towed,⁵⁷ or whether the work delegated to the contractor was hazardous,⁵⁸ or whether there was negligence in the selection of the contractor.⁵⁹ Where there is no conflict in the evidence, and the evidence as a whole reasonably is susceptible of but a single inference, it is a question of law whether the relationship is that of employer and employee or independent contractor;⁶⁰ where from the uncontradicted evidence the only reasonable inference is that the operator was an independent contractor, the court will so declare as a matter of law.⁶¹

Where the contract of hiring is not in writing and can be shown only by parol evidence, the determination of its terms is for the jury,⁶² but, where the contract is in writing, the question whether the relationship of employer and independent contractor exists ordinarily is a question of law to be determined by the terms of the contract itself.⁶³

(5) Members of Owner's Family

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the member of the defendant's family who negligently operated the defendant's motor vehicle was acting with his consent or permission.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting, it is a question for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, whether the member of defendant's family who negligently drove defendant's car resulting in injuries to another was doing so with permission from him,⁶⁴

Where child was killed by motor-truck during excavating work, and nature of work involved backing of heavy dump trucks across public sidewalk, question of fact was presented whether duty or care imposed on landowner in performance of such work was nondelegable on independent contractor which performed the work and whether owner met standard of care thus required so as to make owner liable.—*Katapodis v. being used for a family purpose at the time of the accident,⁷⁶ and whether the family member was acting within the scope of employment for defendant.⁷⁷ The liability of the owner for the negligent driving of some member of his family is a matter of law for the court where the evidence on the issue of agency is clear and uncontradicted.⁷⁸ In an action brought under the family purpose doctrine, a nonsuit is properly granted where the evidence fails to establish that the operator of the vehicle was a member of defendant's family at the time of the accident.⁷⁹

The presumption of permissive use by a member of his family arising from defendant's ownership of the car or from the fact that it was being driven by a member of defendant's family is overcome by uncontradicted evidence that the driver had taken the car for his own purposes and without the permission of defendant so that no question of fact remains.⁸⁰ However, it has also been held that the fact that defendant's testimony that the vehicle was used without his consent is uncontradicted does not necessarily preclude recovery;⁸¹ and, where under statute registration of the vehicle in defendant's name as owner is prima facie evidence of defendant's consent, it is ordinarily for the jury to determine the question of consent on all the evidence produced, including what is made prima facie evidence by statute.⁸²

In jurisdictions where the family purpose doctrine does not apply, a peremptory instruction for defendant should be granted where there is no evidence that the member of the family operating the vehicle was a servant or agent of defendant or that defendant otherwise was guilty of negligence.⁸³

(6) User with Owner's Consent

(a) In general

(b) Hired or lent motor vehicle

(a) In General

On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury to determine whether the motor vehicle which caused the injury was being operated with the owner's consent.

Whether the motor vehicle which caused the injury complained of was being operated with the consent of the owner thereof may be a question of law or of fact.⁸⁴ Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting, or different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether the person using defendant's motor vehicle, and charged with negligent driving resulting in plaintiff's injuries, had taken the vehicle with defendant's consent.⁸⁵

N.J.—Grimditch v. Olsson, 189 A. 480, 5 N.J.Misc. 1064.

The weight of the evidence is for the jury.⁸⁶

The question is one of law for the court where the evidence is uncontradicted and no inference can reasonably be made therefrom that defendant gave such consent,⁸⁷ or where there is not sufficient evidence of a consent, express or implied, having been given.⁸⁸

Effect of presumptions. Under the presumption, flowing from proof of defendant's ownership of the motor vehicle involved, that it was being operated at the time of the accident with defendant's consent, as considered supra § 511 (6) b, proof that defendant owned the motor vehicle involved and with no evidence on behalf of defendant, a plaintiff who has otherwise established liability is entitled to a directed verdict.⁸⁹ Where the evidence in rebuttal of the presumption is contradicted, or different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, the issue of consent is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury;⁹⁰ but, where the rebuttal evidence is uncontradicted and but one inference may reasonably be drawn therefrom, the question generally is one of law for the court.⁹¹ In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the issue of the owner's consent is for the jury notwithstanding the evidence in rebuttal is uncontradicted,⁹² although in such jurisdictions there are also cases in which the courts have decided the issue as a matter of law.⁹³

(b) Hired or Lent Motor Vehicle

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury to determine whether the control of the operator of a hired or loaned motor vehicle was retained by the owner or surrendered to the hirer or borrower.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, in the case of the negligent driving of a hired or loaned motor vehicle, whether the control of the driver was retained by the owner or surrendered to the hirer or borrower of the vehicle.⁹⁴ The mere fact that the vehicle with the chauffeur is loaned does not as a matter of law make the chauffeur the servant of the borrower.⁹⁵

Where the evidence is uncontradicted and the inference to be made therefrom is clear, the question who has such control is for the court,⁹⁶ and, where the presumption of control in the owner following the proof of his ownership is overcome by uncontradicted evidence that the driver had borrowed the car from the owner and was using it in his own business, the owner in an action against him is entitled to a directed verdict in his favor.⁹⁷

(7) Liability of Occupant of Vehicle Driven by Another

The liability of an occupant for injuries occasioned by the operator of the motor vehicle is a question for the jury on conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient and is conflicting or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine the liability of an occupant of a motor vehicle for injuries occasioned by the operator of the vehicle.⁹⁸ The right of an occupant to control the driver can be inferred as a matter of law only when a relationship has been established in which it is conclusively presumed to exist by the law of agency.⁹⁹ On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury or trial court to determine whether

The evidence must be legally sufficient to justify submission to the jury of an occupant's liability for the acts of the operator.²

I. Competency of Operator; Intoxication

- (1) In general
- (2) Intrusting operation of vehicle to incompetent driver

(1) In General

The competency of the defendant to operate a motor vehicle at the time of the accident is a question for the jury on conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence.

On conflicting evidence or where more than one inference may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, to determine whether defendant was competent to operate the motor vehicle at the time of the accident.³

Falling asleep. Where defendant falls asleep

while operating a motor vehicle, his negligence in so doing ordinarily is a question for the jury.⁴

Intoxication. Proof that at the time of the accident defendant was intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor ordinarily is to be considered by the jury as evidence bearing on defendant's negligence in the operation of the motor vehicle,⁵ although it has been held that a violation of a statute making it unlawful to operate a vehicle while under the influence of, or affected by the use of, intoxicating liquor constitutes negligence as a matter of law.⁶ On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury or trial court to determine whether defendant was intoxicated or under the influence of intoxicating liquor.⁷ The weight of the testimony of a witness as to the operator's intoxication is for the jury.⁸

The evidence must be legally sufficient to warrant or require submission to the jury of the issue of intoxication of defendant at the time of the accident.⁹

2. Where defendant was merely accompanying driver of truck which collided with automobile, and had no control over truck, no case was made for jury.—Grimes v. Richfield Oil Co. of California, 289 P. 245, 106 Cal App. 416.

Fact that wife was driving husband's automobile with husband present beside her was insufficient to take case to jury against husband on issue of joint enterprise or imputed negligence, requiring directed verdict for husband, where pleadings based husband's liability solely on joint enterprise theory.—Miller v. Shaw, 187 N.E. 130, 45 Ohio App. 303.

Consciousness

(1) In action against driver and against owner of automobile for injuries sustained in accident occurring when automobile was driven across wide state highway on wrong side of road, whether driver became unconscious presented question of fact.—Rasbach v. Cassidy, 33 N.Y.S.2d 762, 263 App.Div. 1047.

(2) In action for injuries sustained by occupant of automobile which left highway and collided with tree when driver was taken with coughing spell, evidence that driver was conscious during time when saving action should have been taken was for jury.—Lagasse v. Laporte, N.H., 58 A.2d 312.

Physical condition

(1) In general.—Freas v. Campbell, Pa. Com.Pl., 48 Lanc.Rev. 464.

(2) Fact that person has some physical defect in itself will not fix liability as a matter of law in automobile accident case, but it may be properly considered as any other fact in determining negligence, and question is one for jury.—Tucker v. Ragland-Potter Co., 148 S.W.2d 691, 285 Ky. 533.

(2) Intrusting Operation of Vehicle to Incompetent Driver

The negligence of an owner of a motor vehicle in intrusting its operation to an incompetent driver ordinarily is a question of fact.

It is generally a question of fact for the jury, or for the trial court in actions tried without a jury, whether the owner of a motor vehicle was negligent in intrusting the operation of the vehicle to the person who was driving it.¹⁰ The weight of the evidence is for the jury.¹¹ On conflicting evidence or where different inferences may reasonably be drawn, it is for the jury or trial court to determine whether the driver was an incompetent operator,¹² whether defendant had knowledge of his incompetency or inexperience,¹³ and whether defendant consented to the use of the motor vehicle.¹⁴ Where an owner knows that a driver has no operator's license, that knowledge is sufficient to put him on inquiry as to his competency, and it is for the jury to determine under the circumstances whether the owner was negligent in permitting him to drive his vehicle.¹⁵

In order to warrant submission to the jury of defendant's negligence in intrusting a vehicle to an incompetent driver, there must be evidence of probative value tending to show negligence, or from which natural inferences of such negligence may be drawn.¹⁶ breath or about his automobile or person, and where his conduct and appearance were not such as would warrant drawing inference that he was under influence of liquor, and where it did not appear that he was noticeably drunk before accident, trial court properly withdrew issue of defendant's intoxication from jury.—*Schalow v. Intrusting operation to person under age. Proof that defendant intrusted the operation of a motor vehicle to a person who because of his age was prohibited by statute from operating a motor vehicle is at least sufficient to carry the case to the jury on the question of defendant's negligence;¹⁷ and according to some authorities, if the age of the driver and the consent of defendant are established by uncontradicted evidence, the liability of defendant under the statute attaches as matter of law.¹⁸ The violation of an ordinance making it unlawful for the owner of a motor vehicle to permit a person under a specified age to operate such vehicle constitutes negligence as a matter of law.¹⁹ It is generally a question for the jury whether a person under the statutory age was allowed by defendant to drive the car.²⁰

Whether a person injured by a motor vehicle was guilty of such contributory negligence as to preclude him from recovering therefor is, on conflicting evidence, a question of fact for the jury or other trier of facts.

In accordance with the rules relating to questions of law and fact generally, and as applied to the issue of contributory negligence in actions for negligence in general, considered in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 254-263, also 45 C.J. p 1299 note 3—p 1316 note 8, the question whether a person injured by a motor vehicle was guilty of such contributory negligence as to preclude him from recovering therefor is a question of fact for the jury or other trier of fact where the evidence thereon is conflicting;²¹ and of law for the court where the evidence is uncontradicted, and such that only one inference,

Occupants or operators of railroad cars or street-cars. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury, as the trier of the facts, whether an employee of a streetcar or railroad company, who was injured in a collision with an automobile, was guilty of contributory negligence.³⁰ The rule also applies to a passenger in a vehicle of such company.³¹ So also, plaintiff's contributory negligence is a question of fact for the jury, on conflicting evidence, in an action by a railroad company against a motorist for damages sustained by the railroad in a collision with the motor vehicle.³²

(1) In General

Where the evidence is conflicting or subject to more than one inference, it is a question of fact whether the driver of a motor vehicle was guilty of contributory negligence.

Where the evidence is conflicting, or reasonably subject to more than one inference, the question whether the driver of a motor vehicle is guilty of such contributory negligence as to bar his recovery for injuries received in collision with another motor vehicle is a question of fact for the jury or other trier of fact.³³ However, the question is one for

Presumption of due care

Presumption that plaintiff's decedent, while operating jeep which collided with defendants' truck, was exercising requisite degree of care for his own safety and that he was obedient to such provisions of law or universal custom as required him to drive on right-hand side of road was a species of indirect evidence which would prevail in control of deliberations of trial judge sitting without jury unless it was overcome by satisfactory evidence, but, on direct evidence of eyewitness being introduced to establish as fact conduct on deceased's part at variance with the presumption, there was created a conflict in evidence, and determination as to whether such direct evidence overcame presumption was peculiarly within province of trial court.—Siegel v. York, 191 P.2d 50, 84 Cal.App.2d 383.

that the driver's seat of his vehicle was overcrowded³⁷ or in that he drove with one hand.³⁸

Various incidental questions relating to the contributory negligence of the operator of a motor vehicle which have been held, on conflicting evidence, to be questions of fact for the trier of facts,³⁹ such as whether plaintiff or another was driving the vehicle which he occupied when he was injured,⁴⁰ or whether plaintiff's memory was destroyed by the accident so as to invoke the presumption of due care.⁴¹

Competency or experience of driver. It is for the trier of the facts to determine, on conflicting evidence, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence because of his inexperience or incompetency as an operator of a motor vehicle,⁴² or because of his failure to have an operator's license,⁴³ or whether he was under the influence of intoxicating liquors at the time of the accident, and the effect thereof,⁴⁴ or whether a motorist otherwise under a disability was guilty of contributory negligence.⁴⁵

Equipment and condition of motor vehicle. Whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence with respect to the condition and equipment of the vehicle is, on conflicting evidence, a question of fact.⁴⁶ So, it is a question of fact on conflicting evidence whether plaintiff's vehicle had or displayed proper and adequate lights,⁴⁷ and whether the absence of proper and adequate lights under the circumstances constituted contributory negligence.⁴⁸ However, where the evidence is uncontradicted and the inference to be made therefrom is clear it must be determined by the court, as a matter of law, that plaintiff was⁴⁹ or was not⁵⁰ guilty of contributory negligence in this respect.

An automobile driver, blinded by lights of automobile approaching from opposite direction over viaduct, was not chargeable with contributory negligence as matter of law in failing to see unlighted truck, backing down viaduct incline, in time to avoid collision therewith, even though headlights of his automobile did not illuminate highway for over one hundred feet on night of accident—American Carloading Corporation v. Voight, supra.

(a) Speed

Where the evidence is conflicting or subject to differing inferences, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence with respect to the speed at which he was driving his car.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts, usually the jury, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence with respect to the speed at which he was driving his car,⁵¹ in that he was driving at a rate of speed so that he could not stop within the assured clear distance ahead.⁵²

Accordingly, it has been held to be a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence with respect to the speed at which he drove his vehicle at, or approaching, or while

Speed held not negligence as matter of law

(1) The rule that a motorist driving so as to prevent stopping within time to avoid an obstruction within the range of his vision is negligent as a matter of law does not apply where an object which the driver has no reason to expect appears suddenly immediately in front of his automobile.

driving,⁶³ whether he was driving at a rate in excess of the speed limit set by law,⁶⁴ and whether such violation of the speed limit constituted contributory negligence under the circumstances.⁶⁵

However, where the evidence is undisputed and not subject to differing inferences, it is for the court to determine as a matter of law that plaintiff either was,⁶⁶ or was not,⁶⁷ guilty of contributory negligence with respect to the speed at which he was driving. Moreover, where the question of plaintiff's speed is not placed in issue by the pleadings or the evidence, such question should not be submitted to the jury.⁶⁸

(b) Parking

Whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in parking his vehicle where and in the manner in which he did is, on conflicting evidence, a question for the trier of facts.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the jury or other trier of fact whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in parking or stopping his vehicle where and in the manner in which he did,⁶⁹ as where the vehicle was parked or stopped on the traveled part of the highway,⁷⁰ or where the vehicle was parked or stopped partly on the traveled part,⁷¹ in violation of regulations;⁷² or where the material in the vehicle projected over the highway;⁷³ or where the vehicle was parked on the side or shoulder of the road,⁷⁴ or was parked without proper lights or with the lights obscured,⁷⁵ or without fuses, flares, or other appropriate warning signals,⁷⁶ as required by statute.⁷⁷ Whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in opening the door of a parked car when another car is passing is also a question of fact for the trier of facts.⁷⁸

Various incidental questions of fact relating to

parking have been held to be for the jury to decide where the evidence is conflicting,⁷⁹ such as whether plaintiff's vehicle was parked on the traveled or paved portion of the highway,⁸⁰ and whether he had lights on the rear of the parked car.⁸¹ Even though plaintiff parked his car at a place where no parking was allowed under the regulations, the question whether such violation is justified under the circumstances of the case is for the jury.⁸²

Parking on highway with flat tire

Where motorist parked his automobile as far off traveled roadway as would have been possible without driving along on that side of the highway with a punctured tire or without crossing to other side of highway where there was a wider space available off traveled roadway, whether the circumstances justified motorist's failure to remove the automobile from the highway within meaning of statute providing that no person shall park an automobile on a highway when it is practical to park the vehicle off the roadway was for jury.—Kline v. Johannesen, 24 N.W.2d 595, 249 Wis. 316.

it is a question of law for the court to decide whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in the parking of his vehicle.⁸³

(c) Conduct in Other Respects

Where the evidence is conflicting, it is a question of fact for the trier of facts whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in driving a vehicle with respect to control, lookout, signals, turning, backing, stopping, or failure to stop, and position upon the highway.

In accordance with the rules stated supra subdivision a of this section, where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence with respect to the control of his car,⁸⁴ as where the vehicle plaintiff was driving skidded.⁸⁵

Lookout. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to keep a lookout,⁸⁶ or a proper or reasonably careful lookout,⁸⁷ or in failing to keep a lookout to the rear for approaching vehicles,⁸⁸ or in failing to see an object or vehicle in the road in time to stop;⁸⁹ and it is for the jury to determine the degree of care required in maintaining a lookout, and whether a constant lookout was required.⁹⁰ Where the evidence is uncontradicted and not reasonably subject to varying inferences, it is for the court to decide as a matter of law that plaintiff was,⁹¹ or was not,⁹² guilty of contributory negligence.

Determination of insufficiency of evidence

In order to invoke the principle that plaintiff's testimony that he looked but did not see defendant's approaching automobile is insufficient to take the case to the jury, on ground that automobile was in plain view, it must appear as an uncontrovertible fact that automobile was within plaintiff's range of vision at time he claimed to have looked.—Schwartz v. Eitel, C.C.A.Wis., 132 F.2d 760.

92. Iowa.—Kadlec v. Al. Johnson Const. Co., 252 N.W. 103, 217 Iowa 239.

42 C.J. p 1263 note 53.

It has been held that, where plaintiff fails to look for approaching vehicles, the question of contributory negligence is usually for the court,⁹³ but, where plaintiff looks, but does not see a vehicle, or, seeing one, erroneously misjudges its speed or distance, or for some other reason does not recognize the danger, the question of his contributory negligence is generally one for the jury, or the court, where sitting without a jury.⁹⁴

Signals. Where the evidence is conflicting or subject to differing inferences, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to give traffic signals or warnings as required by regulations;⁹⁵ and, on conflicting evidence, it is a question for the jury whether plaintiff gave warning on approaching defendant's car.⁹⁶

Turning. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in turning his car⁹⁷ at a point other than an intersection.⁹⁸

Backing. In accordance with the rules stated supra subdivision a of this section, where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the jury or court sitting without a jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in backing his car.⁹⁹

Stopping or failure to stop. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to stop his car in time to avoid the collision,¹ or to stop it, as where he failed to stop or to stop in time where his vision was obscured by the blinding lights of approaching vehicles.² Where it is impossible to say that plaintiff's negligence in stopping his automobile without signal, in violation of statute, was not the contributing cause of the collision, a verdict may properly be directed for defendant, notwithstanding his negligent speed.³

Position on highway. It is ordinarily a question of fact whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in driving on the wrong side of the highway,⁴ or the wrong lane on the highway.⁵

aa. Plaintiff Following or Passing Other Vehicle

It is a question of fact for the trier of facts, on conflicting evidence, whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in following or passing or attempting to pass a vehicle traveling in the same direction.

Where the evidence is conflicting, or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether plaintiff, operating a vehicle, was guilty of contributory negligence in following a vehicle traveling in the same direction.⁶ Accordingly it has been held to be a question of fact whether plaintiff was chargeable with contributory negligence in colliding with the car ahead where the car ahead suddenly swerved across plaintiff's path,⁷ made a left turn⁸ without signal,⁹ or made a right turn,¹⁰ or where the preceding vehicle slowed down¹¹ or suddenly stopped.¹² So also it is generally a question of fact whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence where he followed the preceding vehicle too closely when it stopped,¹³ where his view of the preceding vehicle was ob-

Negligence as matter of law

(1) It is not negligence as matter of law for automobile driver to follow another automobile within thirty-five to forty-eight feet—Starr v. Rossin, 23 N.E.2d 740, 302 Ill.App. 325.

(2) Maintenance by motorist of space of only two or three car lengths between motorist's automobile and truck ahead, with which truck motorist collided when truck suddenly stopped and both of which had slowed down from speed of twenty-five miles per hour, was held not contributory negligence as matter of law, in absence of evidence as to distance in which motorist could have stopped.—Cook Paint & Varnish Co. v. Hickling, C.C.A.Neb., 76 F.2d 718.

Various incidental questions involved in determining plaintiff's contributory negligence in following or passing other vehicles have been held, on conflicting evidence, to be questions of fact,²⁹ including questions such as whether plaintiff was attempting to overtake defendant,³⁰ whether he was able to go around the vehicle in front of him,³¹ whether plaintiff saw or should have seen the preceding vehicle in time to avoid the collision,³² whether the circumstances were such as to require plaintiff to exercise great care, rather than ordinary care,³³ and the distance between plaintiff's vehicle and the vehicle in front of him.³⁴

Where the evidence is uncontradicted and not reasonably subject to differing inferences of fact, whether plaintiff, who ran into the vehicle ahead of him, was guilty of contributory negligence is a question to be decided by the court as a matter of law.³⁵

bb. Plaintiff Being Followed or Passed

It is a question for the trier of facts, on conflicting evidence, whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in an accident when his vehicle was struck from the rear or while it was being overtaken by a vehicle going in the same direction.

Where the evidence is conflicting, or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence when the vehicle he was driving was struck from the rear,³⁶ as where he was struck while making a right turn³⁷ without giving a signal³⁸ or while making a left turn³⁹ without giving a signal,⁴⁰ or while making a U-turn,⁴¹ or where plaintiff slowed down⁴² or stopped suddenly⁴³ without giving a warning signal.⁴⁴

Similarly, where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in the accident resulting from defendant's passing him going in the same direction;⁴⁵ and the rule has been applied in determining whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to keep to the right⁴⁶ or to move to the right in response to the signal of the overtaking vehicle,⁴⁷ or in making a left turn⁴⁸ after giving a signal⁴⁹ or without giving a signal,⁵⁰ or in making a left turn without keeping a proper lookout,⁵¹ or in failing to keep a proper position on the highway while making a left turn.⁵²

Various incidental questions involved in determining plaintiff's contributory negligence while being followed or passed have been held, on conflicting evidence, to be questions of fact,⁵³ including whether plaintiff had made a sudden stop,⁵⁴ whether plaintiff had given a proper signal of intention to turn⁵⁵ or to stop,⁵⁶ and whether he properly made a left turn.⁵⁷

Questions of law should be decided by the court and not submitted to the jury;⁵⁸ and, where the evidence is uncontradicted and reasonable minds may not differ as to the inferences of fact to be drawn therefrom, the question whether plaintiff, who was being followed or passed, was chargeable with contributory negligence is one of law for the court.⁵⁹

(b) Vehicles Traveling in Opposite Directions

It is for the trier of facts, on conflicting evidence, to determine whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in an accident occurring upon his meeting the defendant's vehicle approaching from the opposite direction.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in an accident occurring on his meeting defendant's vehicle approaching from the opposite direction.⁶⁰

vision was obscured;⁷¹ failed to stop in order to avoid a collision;⁷² failed to take proper steps to avoid the collision;⁷³ or in that he was guilty of careless or negligent driving in other respects.⁷⁴

Various incidental questions involved in determining plaintiff's contributory negligence in an accident with a vehicle traveling in the opposite direction have been held, on conflicting evidence, to be questions of fact for the trier of facts,⁷⁵ including such questions as whether plaintiff was in the exercise of due care for his own safety at the time of the accident,⁷⁶ whether defendant's vehicle could have been seen,⁷⁷ and whether plaintiff could have avoided the accident.⁷⁸

Where the evidence is uncontradicted and not reasonably subject to differing inferences, it is a matter of law for the court to decide that plaintiff was⁷⁹ or was not⁸⁰ guilty of contributory negligence in connection with the accident. It is similarly for the court, rather than the jury, where the evidence is insufficient to warrant submission of the issue.⁸¹

(c) Vehicles on Intersecting Paths

It is for the trier of facts, on conflicting evidence, to determine whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in an accident occurring when the plaintiff's and the defendant's vehicles approached each other on intersecting paths.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the jury or other trier of the facts whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in a collision between his and defendant's motor vehicles approaching each other on intersecting paths.⁸²

(d) Passing Parked Vehicles

Where the evidence is conflicting or subject to differing inferences, it is for the trier of facts to determine the plaintiff's contributory negligence in a collision with, or an accident connected with, a parked vehicle.

Where the evidence is conflicting, or reasonably subject to differing inferences of fact, it is a question of fact whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in a collision with a car parked or stopped upon the highway or partially thereupon,⁵¹ or upon the side or edge of the highway,⁵² or upon the wrong side of the highway,⁵³ or whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in an accident resulting when plaintiff collided with another car in an effort to avoid colliding with an improperly parked car.⁵⁴

Thus, it is for the trier of the facts to determine whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence where the parked or stopped vehicle is not lighted by lights or flares as required by law;⁵⁵

the parked car;⁶² or did not realize that the vehicle in front of him was standing still;⁶³ or failed to have or use proper lights;⁶⁴ or in that he violated a speed regulation;⁶⁵ or otherwise drove at an improper speed.⁶⁶

Various incidental questions involved in determining plaintiff's contributory negligence in an accident in connection with a parked vehicle have been held, on conflicting evidence, to be for the triers of the facts to determine.⁶⁷

Uncontradicted or insufficient evidence. Where the evidence is uncontradicted, and not reasonably subject to differing inferences of fact,⁶⁸ or where the evidence is insufficient to carry the issue to the jury,⁶⁹ it is for the court to rule, as a matter of law, on the alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff.

(e) Acts in Emergencies

It is for the trier of the facts to determine, on conflicting evidence, whether plaintiff, operating a motor vehicle, was confronted with an emergency, and whether he was guilty of contributory negligence in his course of action therein.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of facts whether plaintiff was confronted with an emergency,⁷⁰ whether such emergency resulted from the fault of the other driver,⁷¹ and whether, confronted by an emergency, plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in that he did not do what a man of average prudence would have done under the circumstances.⁷²

Thus, it is for the trier of the facts to determine tory negligence as matter of law.—McMoran v. Associated Oil Co., 257 P. 846, 144 Wash. 276.

sumed the risk of the operator's negligence or misconduct.⁸⁶

The rule has been applied in determining whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in that, while a guest or occupant of defendant's motor vehicle, he failed to be on the lookout for, or to observe, an approaching vehicle or other hazard,⁸⁷ as where plaintiff was intoxicated⁸⁸ or asleep,⁸⁹ or in that he distracted his host's attention from the road, as by conversing with him;⁹⁰ or in that he failed to warn the driver of some traffic hazard or obstruction,⁹¹ such as the existence of a stop sign or signal⁹² or an approaching vehicle;⁹³ or in that he assented to, or acquiesced in, his host's negligence,⁹⁴ as where he failed to warn, or remonstrate with, the operator or protest against his negligence or misconduct in the operation of the vehicle,⁹⁵ such as his negligent or excessive

Various incidental questions of fact involved in determining the contributory negligence of a guest or passenger in defendant's vehicle have been held, on conflicting evidence, to be for the jury to decide,¹¹ including such questions as whether plaintiff knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care should have known, whether the driver was, and, if so, to what extent he was, intoxicated;¹² whether he was in a position which was inherently dangerous;¹³ whether he should have realized or anticipated the dangers in the manner of operation of the vehicle, and whether he should have taken some action with respect to them;¹⁴ whether he had made sufficient protests or warnings as to the dangers involved in the manner of operation of the vehicle;¹⁵ and, in the case of a car leased or furnished by defendant, whether the driver was under the control of the occupants of the car so as to make his contributory negligence imputable to them.¹⁶

Evidence uncontradicted or insufficient. Where the evidence is uncontradicted and the inference to be reasonably drawn therefrom is clear, it is for the court to rule as a matter of law with reference to the alleged contributory negligence, or assumption of risk, of plaintiff¹⁷ or as to his liability for the contributory negligence of the driver.¹⁸ So also, where the evidence is insufficient to carry the issue to the jury, the court should rule on the alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff as a matter of law.¹⁹

(2) Of Motor Vehicles Other than Defendant's

Where the evidence is conflicting it is for the trier of facts to determine whether the guest or occupant of a motor vehicle other than the defendant's was guilty of contributory negligence.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question for the trier of facts, whether the guest or occupant of a motor vehicle other than defendant's was guilty of contributory negligence²⁰ and whether he exercised due or ordinary care for

Particular conduct as contributory negligence.
In accordance with the general rule, it is ordinarily a question for the jury to determine whether a guest or occupant of a motor vehicle was guilty of contributory negligence in that he failed to keep a lookout, so as to warn the driver of hazards,³¹ as where he fell asleep³² or was under the influence of intoxicating liquors;³³ or in that he failed to see, discover, or realize the peril in time, so as to give warning;³⁴ or in that he failed to warn or risk,⁵⁴ and whether plaintiff was riding in an inherently dangerous position.⁵⁵

Evidence uncontradicted or insufficient. Where the evidence is uncontradicted and the inference to be reasonably drawn therefrom is clear,⁵⁶ or where the evidence is insufficient to take the issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence to the jury,⁵⁷ it is for the court to rule, as a matter of law, on the alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff; and where no inference can be drawn that the driver's negligence or failure to observe the regulations contributed to the accident, a verdict for defendant as against a guest riding with such driver cannot be directed on that ground.⁵⁸

d. Motorcyclists

It is for the trier of facts, on conflicting evidence, to determine whether plaintiff, a motorcyclist, was guilty of contributory negligence.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of facts, whether plaintiff, a motorcyclist, struck by defendant, was guilty of contributory negligence.⁵⁹ This

speed;⁸⁶ made a turn improperly;⁸⁷ failed to yield the right of way to the motorist;⁸⁸ or failed to conduct himself properly when faced with an emergency.⁸⁹

Incidental questions of fact involved in determining the contributory negligence of a bicyclist have been held, on conflicting evidence, to be for the trier of the facts,⁹⁰ including such questions as whether plaintiff was on the right or the wrong side of the road,⁹¹ or whether he swerved to the left on the approach of an automobile from behind,⁹² or in front.⁹³

Evidence uncontradicted or insufficient. Where the evidence is uncontradicted and not reasonably subject to differing inferences,⁹⁴ or where the evidence is insufficient to warrant submission of the issue to the jury,⁹⁵ the court must rule on the alleged contributory negligence of a bicyclist as a matter of law.

f. Drivers or Occupants of Horse-Drawn Vehicles

It is for the trier of facts, on conflicting evidence, to determine whether the driver or occupant of a horse-drawn vehicle was guilty of contributory negligence.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the trier of the facts whether the driver of a horse-drawn vehicle, struck by defendant, was guilty of contributory negligence,⁹⁶ in failing to maintain his proper position on the highway;⁹⁷ in failing to yield the right of way to the motor vehicle;⁹⁸ or in that the vehicle did not have or display adequate lights or reflectors.⁹⁹ So, also, where the occupants of a horse-drawn vehicle are injured because the horses were frightened by the motor vehicle, whether plaintiffs were contributorily negligent in the matter is, on conflicting evidence, a question of fact for the jury.¹ However, where the evidence of contributory negligence is insufficient to warrant submission of the issue to the jury, it should not be so submitted by the court.²

Incidental questions of fact are for the jury on conflicting evidence,³ as, for example, whether or not plaintiff's horse was frightened,⁴ or whether plaintiff turned to the left in passing a parked automobile,⁵ or whether plaintiff was asleep at the time of the collision,⁶ or whether the driving of the car was within the control and direction of plaintiff, an occupant therein, so as to make the negligence of the driver of the wagon imputable to plaintiff.⁷

g. Persons on Horseback

It is for the trier of facts to determine, on conflicting evidence, whether a person on horseback was guilty of contributory negligence.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the trier of the facts whether a person on horseback, injured by defendant, was guilty of contributory negligence.⁸

h. Persons Owning or in Charge of Animals

It is for the trier of facts to determine, on conflicting evidence, whether persons, owning or in charge of animals, who are injured or damaged by defendant were guilty of contributory negligence.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury or other trier of the facts to determine whether a person who was in charge of animals, and who was injured by defendant,⁹ or who was injured when the animal or animals were frightened by defendant,¹⁰ was guilty of contributory negligence. Similarly, in an action by the owner of an animal to recover damages for loss suffered when the animal was injured by a motor vehicle, it is a question of fact for the jury on conflicting evidence whether the owner or person in charge of the animal was guilty of contributory negligence.¹¹

Animals running at large. In an action by an owner of a stray animal to recover damages for injuries to the animal struck by defendant's automobile, the question whether the animal was unlawfully running at large is for the jury on conflicting evidence,¹² provided, it has been held, plaintiff was guilty of negligence in permitting it to escape from his control.¹³

(1) In General

Whether a pedestrian injured by defendant was guilty of contributory negligence is, on conflicting evidence, a question for the trier of the facts.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact whether a pedestrian injured by defendant was guilty of contributory negligence.¹⁴ The rule has been applied in determining whether a pedestrian was guilty of con-

(2) Walking along Highway

It is a question for the trier of the facts, on conflicting evidence, whether a pedestrian walking along the highway was guilty of contributory negligence.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury or other trier of facts whether a pedestrian walking along the highway and struck by defendant was guilty of contributory negligence.⁴⁰ This rule has been applied in determining whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in walking along the traveled portion of the road or highway,⁴¹ even though a sidewalk or other safe way for walking is provided;⁴² in walking along the shoulder of the highway;⁴³ in walking along the highway at night;⁴⁴ in failing to maintain a proper lookout;⁴⁵ or to look back or behind;⁴⁶ or while walking on the left side of the highway, against the traffic.⁴⁷ However, where the evidence of contributory negligence of a pedestrian is insufficient, the issue should not be submitted to the jury but should be decided by the court.⁴⁸

Various incidental questions of fact have been held to be for the trier of facts to determine.⁴⁹

Walking on right side of road. It is ordinarily for the jury to decide whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence where he was walking upon the right side of the road or highway,⁵⁰ particularly where he was acting in violation of regulations requiring the pedestrian to walk facing traffic.⁵¹ However, it has also been held that the fact that plaintiff was walking upon the right side of the highway, in violation of a regulation, constitutes contributory negligence as a matter of law,⁵² unless there is evidence of justification for such conduct;⁵³ but whether such conduct was justified has been held to be a question for the jury.⁵⁴

Violation of jaywalking ordinance

Tenn.—National Funeral Home v. Dalehite, 15 Tenn.App. 482.

lized the danger of the approaching vehicle;⁸⁴ and the speed at which he was walking across the street.⁸⁵ However, incidental questions of fact as to which there can be no difference of opinion on the basis of the proved evidence have been held to be for the court.⁸⁶

Uncontradicted or insufficient evidence. Where the evidence is uncontradicted and the inference to be reasonably made therefrom is clear, it is held as matter of law either that plaintiff was⁸⁷ or was not⁸⁸ guilty of contributory negligence. Where the evidence of contributory negligence,⁸⁹ or of the pedestrian's exercise of due care,⁹⁰ is insufficient to warrant submission of the issue to the jury, the court must itself, as a matter of law, decide the issue.

Acts in emergencies. Whether the conduct of a pedestrian faced with an emergency while crossing a street constitutes contributory negligence has been held to be a question for the jury to decide,⁹¹

and it is also ordinarily a question for the jury whether plaintiff pedestrian was in fact faced by an emergency⁹² not of his own making.⁹³

j. Persons Working in or upon Highway

- (1) In general
- (2) Police or traffic officers

(1) In General

Where the evidence is conflicting, the trier of facts should determine the contributory negligence of persons injured while engaged in work or activity upon the highway.

The rule that, where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether a person injured by a motor vehicle was guilty of contributory negligence, as considered supra subdivision a of this section, has been applied to persons injured while engaged in work or activity upon the highway,⁹⁴ such as

(2) Police or Traffic Officers

On conflicting evidence, whether a police or traffic officer struck by the defendant was guilty of contributory negligence is a question of fact.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the trier of the facts whether a police or traffic officer struck by defendant was guilty of contributory negligence,⁹⁹ in that he failed to maintain a proper lookout.¹ However, where the evidence is uncontradicted and the inference of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff may reasonably be made therefrom, it may be held that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.²

Incidental questions of fact are for the jury on conflicting evidence,³ as, for example, how fast plaintiff, a motorcycle policeman, was going,⁴ whether he gave a warning of his approach to a street intersection,⁵ and whether he was driving his motorcycle on the wrong side of the road,⁶

and, if so, whether he had a valid reason therefor,⁷ whether at the time he was engaged in the duties of his position or was riding for his own purposes,⁸ and whether he was in a position of imminent danger not of his own making, so as to invoke the emergency doctrine.⁹

k. Persons Boarding or Alighting from Streetcar, Bus, or Other Vehicle

Whether or not persons struck by defendant's vehicle while boarding or alighting from a streetcar, bus, or other vehicle, or while waiting or walking in the street before boarding or after alighting, were guilty of contributory negligence is a question of fact for the jury or other trier of the facts.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether a person struck by defendant's vehicle was guilty of contributory negligence while boarding or about to board a streetcar, bus, or other vehicle,¹⁰ or while alighting from such a vehicle.¹¹

Evidence held insufficient

Evidence in action for injuries to motorist whose car was "sideswiped" when he stopped temporarily to clean windshield was held insufficient to make issue for jury of plaintiff's contributory negligence in failing to maintain proper lookout, or in stepping into path of defendant's car.—*Winter v. So, also, it is ordinarily a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence when moving to a streetcar, bus, or other vehicle to board it,¹² and crossing a street for that purpose;¹³ or while moving from such vehicle,¹⁴ and crossing a street,¹⁵ after alighting from it. Similarly, the trier of facts must decide, on conflicting evidence, the contributory negligence of plaintiff while waiting in the street to board, or after alighting from, a streetcar, bus, or other vehicle;¹⁶ or while standing in a safety zone for that purpose;¹⁷ or while crossing to trans-

(1) In General

It is for the trier of facts, on conflicting evidence, to determine whether a pedestrian under disability was guilty of contributory negligence, and whether a pedestrian was intoxicated, and, if so, the effect thereof.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether a pedestrian under disability, struck by defendant, was guilty of contributory negligence,²⁴ as in the case of pedestrians who are deaf,²⁵ blind,²⁶ have imperfect eyesight,²⁷ or are of advanced age.²⁸

Intoxication. It is also a question for the jury on conflicting evidence whether plaintiff, a pedestrian, was intoxicated, and the effect thereof.²⁹

(2) Children

Where the evidence is conflicting, it is for the trier of facts to determine the contributory negligence of a child struck by a motor vehicle operated by the defendant.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether a child, struck by a motor vehicle operated by defendant, used due care or was guilty of contributory negligence.³⁰

The rule has been applied in determining the contributory negligence of a minor while a guest or occupant of a motor vehicle;³¹ or while riding a motorcycle,³² or a bicycle,³³ or some other ve-

Exoneration by court held error

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, it was error for trial court to exonerate plaintiff from contributory negligence arising out of intoxication on the ground that evidence supported inference that plaintiff did what would have absolved a sober person from negligence, where there was proof from which a jury might properly infer that plaintiff was so drunk that he could not walk or rely on assumption that defendant would avoid hitting him.—Benedict v. Requirements of evidence stated

(2) In action for injuries sustained by minor pedestrian when struck by an automobile while crossing the street, testimony given on plaintiffs' case, in order to establish contributory negligence as a matter of law, must have been totally inconsistent with the exercise of ordinary care by the pedestrian, even disregarding the disputable presumption as to exercise of ordinary care for his own safety to which pedestrian was entitled because of his inability to testify due to loss of memory resulting from injuries; and, if on the pedestrian's case, the jury could reasonably find that it was more probable or even equally probable that pedestrian was not guilty of contributory negligence, the granting of a nonsuit on that ground would be error.—Satariano v. Sleight, 129 P.2d 35, 54 Cal.App.2d 278.

Improper turn by bicyclist

Evidence of minor bicyclist's violation of statute or ordinance forbidding making of a left turn without passing to right of center of intersection must be undisputed to raise presumption that bicyclist was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.—Holt v. Sudden turn of bicycle without warning

In action for death of boy riding bicycle, struck in rear by automobile driven by defendant in attempting to pass bicycle, defendant's unimpeached testimony that deceased suddenly turned bicycle to right directly in front of automobile without warning after having turned from right to left side of highway required instruction of verdict for defendant.—Bixby v. Ayers, 298 N.W. 533, 139 Neb. 652.

A bicyclist riding downhill on narrow street, on seeing automobile parked on curve, had duty of bringing bicycle under such control that he could stop behind parked automobile and not run into it if necessity created by vehicle approaching in opposite direction should develop, and his failure to fulfill this duty was contributory negligence as matter of law.—Gallen v. Parents with respect to child. Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question for the trier of the facts whether a parent of a child struck by defendant was guilty of contributory negligence with respect to his care or supervision of the child.⁶⁰

§ 528. — Ultimate Negligence; Last Clear Chance Doctrine

Where evidence is conflicting or subject to different inferences, it is a question of fact whether the defendant, notwithstanding plaintiff's contributory negligence, had opportunity to avoid the accident and was guilty of negligence so as to be liable under the doctrine of ultimate negligence or last clear chance.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences of fact may reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question of fact for the trier of the facts whether defendant, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of plaintiff, had opportunity to avoid the accident and was guilty of negligence with respect thereto, subjecting him to liability under the doctrine variously known as the doctrine of the last clear chance, the doctrine of ultimate negligence, the doctrine of discovered peril, or the humanitarian doctrine.⁶¹ However, it is essential that the evidence be sufficient to warrant submission of the issue of negligence under this doctrine to the jury;⁶² and, where the evidence is uncontradicted and no inference may reason-

Requisites ofmissible case

(1) In order to justify submission of a case to the jury on the humanitarian or last clear chance theory, every necessary element of the cause of action based on such theory must be established by the evidence.—

ably be made therefrom that defendant could have avoided the accident, the last clear chance doctrine has no application as a matter of law.⁶³ It has been held that, even though the evidence does not warrant submission of the issue of negligence under this doctrine, the case should not be completely withdrawn from the jury unless every assigned ground of primary negligence is unsupported.⁶⁴ Where the negligence of each of the parties continued concurrently up to the moment of injury, it has been held that the question of ultimate negligence or last clear chance should not be submitted to the jury.⁶⁵

In accordance with these rules, where the evidence is conflicting, the applicability of the last clear chance doctrine, and the liability of defendant thereunder, have been held to be questions of fact where the injured person was the operator or occupant of a motor vehicle⁶⁶ which collided with defendant's vehicle at an intersection,⁶⁷ or with Gurwell v. Jefferson City Lines, supra.

(2) Issue of discovered peril should have been submitted in automobile accident case if discarding adverse evidence, and, crediting all evidence and legitimate conclusions favorable to plaintiff, jury might have found for plaintiff on issue.—Fernandez v. Rahe, Tex Civ.App., 61 S.W.2d 529, error refused.

Failure to blow horn

In order to make a submissible case under humanitarian doctrine based on defendants' failure to sound horn, more is required than showing of a mere possibility that accident might have been avoided if horn had been sounded; and evidence must disclose that a reasonably sufficient time was afforded after peril was discoverable during which interval it was reasonably possible for horn to have been sounded, for plaintiff to have heeded horn and to have escaped to safety.—Smith v. Siedhoff, Mo., 209 S.W.2d 233.

Failure to use chains

In determining whether automobile collision case should have been submitted under last clear chance doctrine, question whether defendant's failure to use chains on icy road was prudent was held immaterial, last chance rule referring only to existing situation and means immediately at hand.—Ramsdell v. Defendant held not negligent as matter of law

In action for death of pedestrian who was struck by automobile, testimony of witness as to test with automobile of same model as defendant's and with headlights of test automobile on same beam as defendant testified he had his at time of accident was not conclusive of fact that defendant, by ordinary care, could have seen pedestrian in a position of peril at such time as thereafter to avoid accident with means at his disposal, so as to establish the defendant's negligence under last clear chance doctrine as a matter of law. —Hartman v. § 530. Instructions

- a. In general
- b. Correctness
- c. Completeness and particularity
- d. Form and language

a. In General

The general rules governing instructions to the jury in civil actions ordinarily apply in actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles.

The rules relating to instructions to the jury in civil actions generally, particularly those which apply in actions for negligence, govern and control the instructions in actions to recover damages for injuries caused by the operation of motor vehicles.⁹² It is the duty of the trial court to instruct the jury as to the rights and duties of all the actors concerned in the accident.⁹³ The court may give an instruction that the jury should not be guided by passion, sympathy, or prejudice in arriving at its verdict,⁹⁴ but a failure to do so is not error.⁹⁵

Effect of request or absence thereof. As a rule, the failure to give a particular instruction, or to give an instruction on any theory or phase of the case or on any particular subject, is not error where no request therefor has been made.⁹⁶ It is error to refuse to give a requested instruction correctly stating the law on a material matter not sufficiently or substantially covered by other instructions.⁹⁷ On the other hand, it is not error to refuse to give a requested instruction where, in so far as it correctly states the law applicable to the case, the subject matter thereof is fully or substantially and adequately covered by other instructions given by the court,⁹⁸ or where the instructions given by the court fully cover the issues;⁹⁹ and this is true even though the requested instruction could properly have been given.¹ Where the case is submitted to the jury for a special verdict only, it is proper to refuse a requested instruction on the ultimate question of liability.²

Definitions. It may be proper or necessary for the trial court to define particular words and phrases used in the instructions;³ but it is not necessary to define words of common meaning and not constituting technical terms.⁴ It has been held that in the absence of a request for an instruction defining the term, the failure of the court to define "negligence"⁵ or a word which is in general use⁶ and the meaning of which is probably understood by every juror⁷ is not error; but it has also been held that failure to give a necessary definition is error, even in the absence of a request for a definition.⁸

A "dogfall" instruction is an instruction to the effect that, if the jury shall believe that both drivers were negligent and their concurrent negligence caused the accident and consequent injuries, they will not award damages either to plaintiff or to defendant.⁹

Instructions should correctly state the law on the subject matter covered, and a requested instruction containing an inaccurate statement of the law is properly refused.

An instruction given by the court must correctly state the law on the subject matter covered thereby.¹⁰ However, an instruction may be correct in substance even though there is some question about the accuracy of certain words and phrases employed therein.¹¹ Sometimes an objection to a particular instruction or a portion thereof is not sustained where, in view of other instructions or on a reading of the entire charge, it appears that the jury were correctly and adequately instructed on the subject matter embraced in the instruction in question;¹² but there are cases in which an error in one instruction may not be cured by other instructions.¹³

Requested instructions. It is proper to refuse to give a requested instruction which contains an inaccurate statement of law;¹⁴ and some authorities hold that a requested instruction cannot be qualified by the trial court,¹⁵ but other authorities hold that a requested instruction which is defective or erroneous may be modified by the court and given in its modified form.¹⁶

As to particular matters. The rule that an instruction must correctly state the law on the subject matter covered thereby is applicable to instructions on the responsibility of defendant for the operation of the motor vehicle;¹⁷ the care required;¹⁸ the rights and duties of the operator of a motor vehicle;¹⁹ and the relative rights and duties of such an operator and the operator of another motor vehicle²⁰ or a person sitting in a stationary buggy;²¹ common or joint enterprise;²² sole or joint liability;²³ damages;²⁴ and instructions defining terms.²⁵ The rule is also applicable to instructions as to the anticipation of, or the assumptions which an individual may make respecting, the presence or actions of others,²⁶ such as assumptions which one may make as to the obedience of others to the law and the rules of the road,²⁷ the exercise of due care by others,²⁸ the stopping of other vehicles at an intersection,²⁹ and the yielding by others of the right of way.³⁰

c. Completeness and Particularity

An instruction should include the essential elements of the rule involved in the particular instruction and should not be too general or vague.

An instruction given³¹ or requested³² should not omit any essential elements or conditions of the rule or rules governing the right, duty, or liability constituting the subject matter of the instruction; but sometimes, in view of the evidence, particular omissions have been held not prejudicial.³³ Some instructions have been condemned as being too general,³⁴ vague,³⁵ or not sufficiently specific,³⁶ at least where more specific instructions were requested.³⁷ However, in the absence of a request for a better instruction, an instruction stating a particular rule or doctrine and actually embracing all elements thereof is not rendered erroneous by the fact that it is extremely terse or meager,³⁸ is more abbreviated than one which is frequently given,³⁹ or is couched only in general terms;⁴⁰ if a party desires a more elaborate, amplified, or specific instruction on a particular subject than the one given by the court, it is his duty to request it.⁴¹ Sometimes an instruction is held sufficient for the practical purposes of the trial, even though it is too indefinite in one part and too specific in another.⁴²

The instructions should not be argumentative, confusing, conflicting, or ambiguous; and a requested instruction which is badly worded may properly be refused.

The instructions given by the court must not be argumentative,⁴³ confusing or misleading,⁴⁴ or inconsistent, conflicting, or contradictory.⁴⁵ Also an instruction given by the court should not be ambiguous;⁴⁶ but an ambiguity in a particular instruction is not fatal where the charge, as a whole, leaves no doubt as to the correct principles of law applicable to the case.⁴⁷

Instructions held properly refused

In action for death of individual struck by truck, requested instructions using words "plaintiffs" and "plaintiff" where the word "deceased" should have been used, and using

struction which is argumentative,⁴⁹ ambiguous,⁵⁰ confusing or misleading,⁵¹ or which is not couched in language calculated to enlighten the jury.⁵² In some jurisdictions the trial court may give an instruction in its own language⁵³ and need not follow the language of a requested instruction,⁵⁴ even where it is pertinent⁵⁵ and is couched in proper language,⁵⁶ and it is preferable for the court to use its own language in presenting to the jury the subject matter of a requested instruction.⁵⁷ However, under the statutes of a few jurisdictions, the trial court is required to give or refuse a requested written charge in the exact language in which it is written⁵⁸ and is without authority to change its verbiage.⁵⁹

§ 531. — Identity and Ownership of Vehicle

Proper instructions as to the ownership of a vehicle may be given where the matter of ownership is a material issue in the case.

Proper instructions as to the ownership of a motor vehicle involved in an accident may be given where the matter of ownership has been made a material issue in the case by the pleadings and proof.⁶⁰ It has been held proper to instruct the jury that the fact of nonregistration of the vehicle may be viewed as one of the circumstances to be considered by the jury in determining its ownership.⁶¹ It may not be error for the court in its instructions to assume that a particular individual was the owner of a motor vehicle involved in an accident where the only testimony on the subject is to the effect that the vehicle was owned by such person, and throughout the entire trial the vehicle was repeatedly referred to, without objection, as the vehicle of such individual.⁶² An instruction as to ownership has been held properly refused where the alleged owner admitted the execution of a bill of sale to him and the issuance of a license in his name, and the only evidence that he did not have title was his statement to that effect.⁶³

§ 532. — Negligence in General

Instructions on the question of the negligence of the operator of a motor vehicle are governed by the general rules as to the propriety of instructions and the necessity that they set forth the law correctly.

The general rules governing the propriety of instructions, and the necessity that they set forth the law correctly, apply to instructions on the question of negligence, or the duties or care required, of the operator of a motor vehicle.⁶⁴ These rules the word "he" to refer to corporation defendant, were properly refused where it was questionable whether jury would have understood that the word "deceased" was intended where the word "plaintiff" was used—Schipper v. Brashear Truck Co., Mo., 132 S.W.2d 993, 125 A.L.R. 674.

It has been said that an instruction containing a general definition of ordinary care is not a sufficient statement of the care required of the operator of an automobile;⁷⁰ but there is also authority to the effect that, except as to a particular act or omission made negligence per se by statute or ordinance,⁷¹ the trial court should not instruct the jury what ordinary care requires to be done in a particular case.⁷² Where the duties of the drivers of motor vehicles involved in a collision were equal and reciprocal, the instructions should so advise the jury.⁷³ Whether the presence of three persons in the front seat of an automobile furnishes a basis for a charge on negligence depends, in the absence of statute or ordinance, on the particular circumstances of the case.⁷⁴

§ 533. — Contributory Negligence in General

Appropriate instructions correctly setting forth the law may and should be given on the subject of contributory negligence, where the matter is an issue for the jury in the case.

Where there are pleadings and evidence on which an instruction on contributory negligence may properly be based, such an instruction,⁷⁵ rather than one withdrawing the question from the jury,⁷⁶ may and should be given. Instructions on contributory negligence should correctly instruct the jury regarding the acts or omissions on the part of plaintiff which would bar recovery;⁷⁷ they should explain to the

When instruction justified

In order to sustain an instruction that plaintiffs were barred from recovery by decedent's contributory negligence unless entitled to recover under last clear chance doctrine, it was not necessary that contributory negligence of pedestrian be proximate cause of accident, but instruction could be sustained if pedestrian contributed directly in any way to his injuries.—Spooner v. jury, with reasonable clarity, the meaning of contributory negligence and in what manner the jury would be justified in finding that it was present.⁷⁸

An instruction on contributory negligence should not be confusing or misleading,⁷⁹ nor should it be so general and involved, and so wanting in substance, as not to afford the jury any guide in determining whether or not plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.⁸⁰ It has been held to be better practice to give a concrete, rather than general, instruction on contributory negligence.⁸¹ A requested instruction on contributory negligence

which is long and involved, carries several distinct matters, and places undue emphasis on a particular matter is properly refused.⁸² Where the evidence discloses several separable incidents or situations in each of which a duty on the part of plaintiff to exercise ordinary care existed, the instruction on that question should be sufficiently specific to inform the jury that plaintiff's duty was to exercise ordinary care in each situation.⁸³

Instructions on contributory negligence should conform and be confined to the pleadings,⁸⁴ issues,⁸⁵ and evidence⁸⁶ in the case; the court should not in-

should not be confusing or misleading.⁹¹ Such instructions must be warranted by the pleadings⁹² and the issues or theories⁹³ in the case. An instruction to the effect that plaintiff is seeking recovery solely on the humanitarian doctrine is properly refused where plaintiff seeks recovery on other grounds.⁹⁴ Where the court has refused to permit the defense of contributory negligence to be asserted in the trial, and has refused to give instructions on that theory or to permit argument thereon, it should not thereafter give an instruction on the theory of the last clear chance.⁹⁵

An instruction on the doctrine of the last clear chance or the like need not and should not be given where the evidence is insufficient to show its application to the facts of the case or where the practically undisputed evidence shows that it could not apply;⁹⁶ and it may be proper, under the evidence, to instruct the jury that the last clear chance doctrine is not applicable;⁹⁷ but an instruction as to such doctrine is not necessarily erroneous because of the absence of direct evidence that defendant actually knew of the presence of the injured person.⁹⁸

It may be proper for the court to give an instruction authorizing a verdict for defendant if the jury believe that the evidence negatives one of the essential elements of the humanitarian doctrine.⁹⁹ An instruction that if plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence he cannot recover is erroneous and properly refused where, under the circumstances, the question of contributory negligence is immaterial or not decisive because a case is presented under the humanitarian doctrine.¹ It has been held proper, under particular circumstances to refuse to give a requested instruction which applies the last clear chance doctrine to plaintiff and charges that, notwithstanding defendant's negligence, plaintiff cannot recover if he discovered such negligence in time to avoid its consequences, and failed to do so.²

§ 535. — Acts in Emergencies

Appropriate instructions may be given concerning the duty of a person confronted with a sudden danger or emergency, where the issue has been properly raised.

An instruction stating the law governing the duty and responsibility of a person confronted with a sudden and unexpected danger or peril which could not have been reasonably anticipated and which was not brought about by his own negligence may properly be given where the pleadings and evidence are sufficient to warrant it;³ but in an action by a pe-

§ 536. — Violation of Statute or Ordinance

Where the pleadings and evidence so warrant, appropriate and correct instructions may be given in an action for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles, as to the rights and duties of the parties under a statute or ordinance.

It may be proper and necessary, where the evidence and pleadings so warrant, to instruct the jury as to rights and duties of the parties under a statute or ordinance.⁹ An instruction on a statute or ordinance should not ordinarily be given in the absence of evidence¹⁰ or allegations in the pleadings¹¹ showing the application of the statute or ordinance to the facts of the case. However, where defendant or his counsel concedes the existence of facts or circumstances rendering a particular statute applicable, the court may,¹² and should,¹³ give a proper instruction thereon. In the case of an ordinance not judicially noticed, the court need not give an instruction thereon where no evidence thereof has been introduced.¹⁴

An instruction bearing on a statute or ordinance should correctly state the law,¹⁵ and should be based on alleged violations of the statutes or ordinances

Necessity of using language of statute or ordinance. It is proper²⁰ and desirable²¹ for an instruction stating the law embodied in a statute or ordinance to be couched in the exact language of the statute or ordinance; but a slight departure therefrom is not necessarily error,²² since it is sufficient to give an instruction substantially in the language of the statute or ordinance.²³

Hypothesizing defendant's version

In automobile guest's action for injuries in collision with defendant's automobile, defendant who claimed that the only cause of the collision was negligence of guest's host without defendant's conduct contributing or concurring in any way to cause the collision was entitled to have his version hypothesized to the jury.

error where it is apparent from the other instructions given in the case that the jury fully understood the issue involved.³⁷ A proposed instruction dealing with causal connection may properly be modified to clarify and distinguish the meaning of a term.³⁸

Unavoidable accident. While, according to some authorities, it may be proper or necessary for the court to give an instruction on the question of accident or unavoidable accident,³⁹ other authorities have disapproved the giving of such an instruction.⁴⁰ The court need not instruct the jury with reference to the law of unavoidable accidents, where the instructions given eliminate the possibility of a recovery if the jury should find an unavoidable accident.⁴¹ In any event, such an instruction should state the law correctly⁴² and should not be confusing or misleading.⁴³

Where such issue is not presented by the pleadings or evidence, an instruction on accident or unavoidable accident should not be given, and, if requested, is properly refused.⁴⁴ Thus such an instruction is not justified where all the evidence tends to show that the death or injury in question was caused by the negligence of defendant⁴⁵ or by the negligence either of defendant or of plaintiff or decedent;⁴⁶ and a requested instruction on unavoidable accident is properly refused where each party contends that the collision was caused entirely by the negligence of the other, and the case is tried on that theory.⁴⁷ An instruction which tells the jury that, in order to class the accident as unavoidable, the driver should use every effort to avoid the injury is equivalent to saying all the available

means at his command.⁴⁸

§ 539. — Collision with Bicycle or Motorcycle

Instructions in cases involving collisions between motor vehicles and bicycles or motorcycles should set forth the law correctly, without being confusing or misleading.

The court should instruct the jury correctly on issues which have been properly raised concerning the relative rights and duties of the operator of a motor vehicle and a bicyclist⁴⁹ or motorcyclist.⁵⁰

the doctrine of sudden appearance in the case of an infant pedestrian chargeable with contributory negligence unless there is evidence that such infant slipped, fell, or was propelled into the path of the vehicle involuntarily,⁶¹ and that in the absence of such evidence the doctrine of sudden appearance is sufficiently presented by a contributory negligence instruction.⁶² A requested instruction with respect to the duty of a driver to a child is properly refused where it fails to disclose the whole duty of the driver.⁶³

Persons under disability. The instructions in actions involving injuries to a person who is under a disability should correctly set forth the law⁶⁴ and should not tend to mislead or confuse the jury;⁶⁵ moreover, such instructions should be applicable under the evidence in the case.⁶⁶

§ 542. — Injury to Pedestrian

Instructions on the respective rights and duties of motorists and pedestrians should correctly set forth the law applicable under the pleadings and evidence, and should not be confusing or misleading.

In an action for injuries sustained by pedestrians as a result of the operation of motor vehicles, the parties are entitled to have the jury properly instructed on the issues presented,⁶⁷ and instructions of an instruction requested by defendant, as far as concerns the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant it, is determined by the probative evidence favorable to defendant, and not to the pedestrian.⁷²

It may be proper for the court to call attention to the differing degrees of care required of a pedestrian, dependent on whether he was crossing at a street intersection or crosswalk, or was crossing at some other place;⁷³ and, where one of the contested questions in the case is whether or not the pedestrian was on a crosswalk within a statutory definition of that term, which in turn depends on whether a particular avenue is an alley or a street, the instructions of the court should afford the jury appropriate assistance in deciding the question.⁷⁴

Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether the accident occurred at one place or another, the court should instruct separately as to the reciprocal rights and duties of pedestrians and vehicles at each place⁷⁵ and thereby give the jury appropriate instructions to apply to the case according to their finding as to the exact location.⁷⁶ It has been held that defendant is not entitled to an instruction on sudden appearance unless it be shown that the pedestrian slipped, fell, or was propelled into the path of the car involuntarily, and contributory negligence is not pleaded,⁷⁷ and that in the absence of such conditions the theory of sudden appearance is sufficiently presented to the jury by a contributory negligence instruction.⁷⁸ An instruction as to the con-

Circumstances not warranting instruction

A "sudden appearance" instruction for automobile driver is not warranted where driver has been aware of person's presence, or should have been aware of it in exercise of care which law places on him, for an appreciable length of time prior to action on his part to avert a collision.—Likins' Adm'r v. Solinger, 190 S.W.2d 564, 300 Ky. 824.

78. Ky.—Straughan's Adm'r v. Fendley, 191 S.W.2d 391, 301 Ky. 209—Kentucky Virginia Stages v. Tackett's Adm'r, 171 S.W.2d 4, 294 Ky. 189.

tributory negligence of the pedestrian need not necessarily set out his specific duties.⁷⁹

Right of way. The giving of an instruction as to the right of way of a pedestrian at a public crossing is justified by evidence showing that plaintiff, a pedestrian, was upon or very near a street crossing at the time of the accident;⁸⁰ but it is proper to refuse to give a requested instruction as to the right of way between pedestrians and automobiles at a place other than a street crossing where it does not appear from the evidence that there are any defined pedestrians' crossings over the way on which the accident occurred.⁸¹ In order to authorize an instruction on the duty of a motorist to yield the right of way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk as required by statute, the averments of the pedestrian's complaint should bring the case within the statutory provisions or should state the facts so fully that from the facts pleaded it readily appears that the case falls within the statute and discloses the duty owed by the motorist to the pedestrian without indulging in speculation or depending on doubtful inference.⁸²

Instructions involving the question of right of way in actions for injuries to pedestrians should correctly set forth the law.⁸³ It may be appropriate under the circumstances for an instruction on the right of way as between motor vehicles and pedestrians to include an explanation that a vehicle driver who is entitled to the right of way is not thereby excused from the duty to exercise ordinary care.⁸⁴ An instruction on the right-of-way rule should not be stated in language so abstract and laconic as to leave the jury free to believe that a pedestrian struck outside of a pedestrian crossing must have been guilty of failing to yield the right of way and consequently guilty of contributory negligence.⁸⁵ It has been held that, in order to avoid misapprehension and confusion, the expression "yielding the right of way" should be used in an instruction only in the statutory sense.⁸⁶

§ 543. — Injury to Passenger, Guest, or Occupant

Instructions involving the right or duties of a passenger or guest in a motor vehicle should correctly set forth the law applicable to the issues in the case.

Where the issues in the case so warrant, instructions should be given as to the duties or care owed by or to a passenger, guest, or occupant who is suing for injuries sustained by him as a result of the operation of a motor vehicle.⁸⁷ Such instructions

§ 544. — Injury to Person Standing or Sitting on Highway

The general rules governing instructions apply in actions for injuries to persons standing or sitting upon the highway.

The general rules as to the necessity and propriety of instructions in actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles have been applied in actions for injuries to persons standing or sitting upon the highway.⁹³

§ 545. — Injury to Person Moving to or from Streetcar

Instructions on the care owed by or to one moving to or from a streetcar should state the law correctly.

Instructions in an action for injuries arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle, as to the duty or care owed by or to a person moving to or from a streetcar, should state the law correctly⁹³ and they should conform to and be warranted by the facts of the case.⁹⁴ It is not necessary for the court to give an instruction on the question of the contributory negligence of a person preparing to board a streetcar where it appears that such person was standing in a proper place and that there is no evidence to show any contributory negligence on his part.⁹⁵

§ 546. — Vehicles Stopping, Backing, or Turning

Appropriate instructions may be given in actions arising out of the stopping, backing, or turning of motor vehicles.

it may be necessary for the court to give instructions only on the general duties of a driver and his duties when meeting a motor vehicle coming from an opposite direction.⁷ It may be unnecessary for the court to define the statutory duties of the operators of motor vehicles involved in a collision where the presence and manner of operation of each vehicle were known to the driver of the other.⁸

§ 548. — Vehicles Crossing

Instructions as to the rights and duties of the drivers of motor vehicles crossing each other should correctly set forth the law applicable under the pleadings and evidence.

Appropriate instructions should be given on the issues raised in an action involving the rights and duties of the drivers of motor vehicles which cross each other at an intersection or elsewhere.⁹ Such instructions should not be confusing or misleading,¹⁰ and, likewise, under the decisions, such

the rule should make an appropriate request therefor, and, if he fails to do so, he cannot later attack the court's charge as given.¹² The propriety of instructions affecting the right of way at intersections depends on the special circumstances of the case;¹³ and failure of the court to instruct on the right of way at an intersection has been held not to constitute error where no instruction on the point was requested.¹⁴ The court may modify a requested instruction by striking out an improper part thereof.¹⁵

The court need not and should not charge on matters having no application under the pleadings, evidence, or claims of proof of the parties.¹⁶ An

of the necessity⁵³ or failure⁵⁴ to give warning is of a negative character. However, an instruction on this subject should not be given where it is not warranted by the evidence in the case.⁵⁵ Thus an instruction on the failure to give a warning or signal should not be given where the evidence shows that there was no necessity for giving a warning or signal,⁵⁶ or that the failure to give it could not have been the proximate cause of the collision or accident,⁵⁷ as where the evidence shows that the vehicle was seen at a sufficient distance away for the accident to have been avoided.⁵⁸ Where there is evidence that the driver of the automobile shouted, it may be error to instruct that warning must be given by some signal device on the automobile.⁵⁹

Instructions as to the duty to give⁶⁰ or heed⁶¹ a warning or signal should correctly set forth the law, and, moreover, they should be applicable under the pleadings.⁶² An instruction on the duty to give a signal should not be so general and vague as to allow the jury too much room for speculation and conjecture.⁶³

Lookout. Instructions on the duty of a motorist to maintain a proper lookout may be appropriate under the circumstances of the case.⁶⁴ Such instructions should set forth the law correctly⁶⁵

§ 555. — Speed and Control

Appropriate instructions correctly setting forth the law as to the speed or control of motor vehicles should be given where warranted by the issues in the case.

It may be proper or necessary for the court to give, and error for it to refuse, instructions on the speed or control of a motor vehicle involved in an accident.⁶⁷ Such instructions should correctly set forth the law;⁶⁸ and, where a requested instruction does not set forth the law correctly, the court incomplete,⁷¹ or so general as to bear no relation to the problems to be solved by the jury.⁷² In a case where a violation of speed regulations involves the question whether the accident occurred in a closely built-up portion of a municipality, it may be the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the proper definition of a closely built-up portion of a municipality.⁷³ It has been considered that it is better to omit from the instructions any mention of the speeds indicated by the statutes for business and residence districts and outside such districts, and, rather, to define the meaning of the basic rule requiring a reasonable and prudent speed in the light of the existing conditions.⁷⁴ The giving of an instruction stating the substance of a statutory provision to the effect that a speed of more than a prescribed rate should be prima facie evidence that it is unreasonable was held to be error, where the provision was intended to be a rule for the guidance of the court only, and not a rule of evidence to be given to the jury.⁷⁵ It has been held that an instruction on a law declaring a certain speed prima facie evidence of negligence should be separate from an instruction enumerating the driver's duties generally.⁷⁶

Instructions on the subject of speed or control should be applicable under the issues and theories of the case,⁷⁷ and under the pleadings⁷⁸ and also under the evidence⁷⁹ therein. Thus, an instruction as to an unlawful or unreasonable rate of speed may and should be omitted where there is no evidence that the motor vehicle in question was operated at an unlawful or unreasonable rate of speed.⁸⁰ Likewise, in the absence of evidence showing or tending to show that the speed of the automobile contributed to, or had anything to do with, the collision or accident, the court may properly omit or refuse to give an instruction on the subject⁸¹ or it may instruct the jury to disregard the matter of speed.⁸²

Of course, the evidence in a particular case may be sufficient to justify an instruction on control, or negligence in operating a motor vehicle at an excessive rate of speed,⁸³ and this is true, even though the exact rate of speed,⁸⁴ as well as its being the proximate cause of the collision,⁸⁵ is a matter of inference rather than of direct testimony. Where a witness has testified as to the speed at which a motor vehicle was traveling, it has been held not erroneous to charge that the jury can find a greater speed from the circumstantial evidence, such as the distance the vehicle went after the brakes were applied,⁸⁶ but that the jury could not merely surmise or guess that it was going faster.⁸⁷

Where the undisputed evidence shows that defendant's automobile was driven at a rate of speed constituting a violation of an ordinance and negligence per se, an instruction clearly submitting to the jury the question whether the violation of the ordinance was the proximate cause of the collision is sufficient,⁸⁸ even though it does not require the jury to find the rate of speed at which the automobile was driven⁸⁹ or that the violation of the ordinance constituted negligence.⁹⁰ It has been held that a charge characterizing any definite speed as legal can be sustained only when the circumstances of the case are such that all reasonable men must agree that such a speed was reasonable and proper under the circumstances;⁹¹ and in the event of such a situation arising, it has been said that the better practice would be to tell the jury directly that there is no issue of undue speed for their consideration.⁹² An instruction is not necessarily erroneous for its failure to submit the particular rate of speed mentioned in the petition.⁹³

§ 556. — Applicability to Pleadings and Evidence in General

- a. In general
- b. Issues, theories, or claims
- c. Instructions as to existence or weight of facts or evidence

a. In General

The instructions in an action for injuries arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle should, in general, be such and only such as are applicable under the pleadings and evidence in the case.

In general, the trial court may and should give instructions which are warranted by both the pleadings and the evidence,⁹⁴ and plaintiff is privileged to submit his case on any one or all of the charges of negligence which are supported by evidence.⁹⁵ On the other hand, only such instructions as are applicable to the pleadings and evidence should be given,⁹⁶ and the court need not and should not give instructions which are not warranted by either the pleadings or the evidence,⁹⁷ although the latter rule should not be rigidly applied to general instructions intended to clarify the minds of the jurymen,⁹⁸ and it may not be error to give an instruction assuming a certain fact which, although not specifically alleged in the complaint or brought out in evidence, was assumed on the trial.⁹⁹

Pleadings. The instructions should be applicable under the pleadings in the case,¹ and various instructions have been held erroneous as ignoring or failing properly to present the matters set forth in the allegations of the petition,² as submitting matters not alleged in the petition,³ or not restricting the jury to the grounds of negligence alleged in the complaint or petition.⁴ Other instructions, however, have been held sufficient to present the contentions made in the pleadings,⁵ to be authorized or warranted by the pleadings,⁶ or not to be broader than the allegations of the pleadings.⁷ Where the answer contains a general denial of all the material allegations of the petition, it is prejudicial for the court to state in its charge that defendant has not specifically denied certain matters.⁸ Where two grounds of negligence are alleged, it is proper to give an instruction that a finding for defendant on one ground shall be confined to that ground.⁹ It is proper to refuse to give a requested instruction which does not conform or is not confined to the matters alleged in the pleadings.¹⁰

Evidence. The court need not and should not give instructions which ignore material evidence or exclude it from consideration by the jury, or which are contrary or inapplicable to, or are not based on, the evidence in the case.¹¹ An instruction may be authorized by negative testimony¹² or inferences derivable from the evidence,¹³ and sometimes an instruction stating a certain rule may be not erroneous as given, in view of the absence of evidence showing the application of a qualification of the rule¹⁴ or the application of a different rule.¹⁵

The court is not under any duty to model its instructions solely on the evidence given on behalf of plaintiff.¹⁶ It is not error to give an instruction based on evidence admitted without objection,¹⁷ or to refuse to give a requested instruction based on excluded evidence.¹⁸ Where certain evidence introduced was admissible, if at all, only for the purpose of contradicting a witness, an instruction which gives the impression that the jury may consider it as substantive proof of negligence is erroneous.¹⁹

Matters pleaded but not proved. In some jurisdictions it is held that the trial court need not, and should not, instruct the jury as to matters which have been pleaded but in respect of which no evidence has been introduced,²⁰ and that, where the allegations of negligence are more comprehensive than the proof, the instructions on negligence should be restricted to the evidence.²¹ However, it has also been held not improper to instruct the jury on an issue presented by the pleadings, even though no evidence thereon has been offered by either party.²²

Matters proved but not pleaded. The giving of an instruction on a matter not pleaded is error where evidence relating thereto has been erroneously admitted over objection,²³ but not where evidence bearing thereon has been introduced without objection²⁴ and the case has been tried on the theory that the matter was in issue.²⁵ Thus, a defense which appears in the evidence and has been urged on the trial may justify an instruction thereon, even though it was not specifically pleaded.²⁶

b. Issues, Theories, or Claims

The instructions should present and cover the issues in the case and the reasonable theories of the parties which find support in the evidence.

The instructions may and should present and cover the issues,²⁷ be based or predicated thereon,²⁸ and be adapted²⁹ and applicable or pertinent thereto;³⁰ they need not and should not ignore issues,³¹ submit to the jury a matter which is not in issue,³² or deal with a matter which is beyond or not confined to the issues.³³ The instructions should correctly state the law as to the matters to be proved.³⁴ An instruction which is in the language of a motor vehicle statute and which is correct as far as it purports to state the law is not erroneous because it omits a portion of the statute, where, in view of the issue on which the case was tried, the omitted portion would not be helpful for any purpose.³⁵

While it is not error to fail to charge on a theory not involved in the case³⁶ or to fail to give an instruction which is not in accord with any theory of the case,³⁷ the court may and should give instructions expounding the law on every reasonable and legitimate theory,³⁸ according to the judicial decisions on the question, either of plaintiff³⁹ or of defendant⁴⁰ which finds support in the evidence. Also, while it is proper to refuse to give a requested instruction which is not applicable to any claim made in the case,⁴¹ the court should give an instruction on a claim made by plaintiff,⁴² and it should not give instructions which ignore a defense,⁴³ such as contributory negligence,⁴⁴ which is supported by the evidence.

c. Instructions as to Existence or Weight of Facts or Evidence

While the instructions may state the degree of proof required, they should not invade the province of the jury by charging as to the weight to be accorded to particular evidence.

The instructions should correctly state the law as to the degree of proof required,⁴⁵ but should not invade the province of the jury⁴⁶ by charging on the weight to be accorded to, or the sufficiency of, particular evidence.⁴⁷ Also, the instructions must not single out and emphasize or give undue prominence to some particular part or phase of the evidence,⁴⁸ and a requested instruction which does so is properly refused.⁴⁹ In an action against two defendants, an instruction requiring plaintiff to show by his own evidence that one defendant was guilty of negligence is erroneous⁵⁰ and peculiarly harmful to plaintiff where each defendant has introduced evidence tending to show negligence on the part of the other.⁵¹ While the instructions given by the court should not assume the existence or nonexistence of material controverted facts⁵² and it is proper to refuse to give a requested instruction containing such an assumption,⁵³ it is proper for the court in its instructions to assume the existence of a fact shown by undisputed evidence,⁵⁴ and the assumption of an immaterial fact is not prejudicial.⁵⁵

A remark made by the court, in the course of its instructions to the jury, about automobiles generally has been held not to be objectionable as a comment on any fact in the case⁵⁶ or as an expression of opinion as to whether a fact is fully or sufficiently proved.⁵⁷ Also, a reference by the court, in one of its instructions, to the place where the accident happened as being in a thickly settled part of a city is not such a comment on the facts as to constitute error where the place of the accident does not appear to be material.⁵⁸ The failure of the court to give an instruction with reference to circumstantial evidence is not error where the case does not depend on circumstantial evidence alone.⁵⁹

Credibility of witnesses. An instruction that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others, required by statute to be given on all proper occasions, should be given where plaintiff and some of his witnesses testified that defendant's automobile was running at the time of the accident, and defendant and some of his witnesses testified that the automobile was standing still and that plaintiff was not struck by it but fell in front of it.⁶⁰ Where the evidence clearly shows that the driver had not violated a statute in respect of stopping and rendering assistance after an accident, it is prejudicial error to instruct that his driving away from the place of the accident may be considered as bearing on his credibility as a witness.⁶¹

§ 557. — Presumptions and Burden of Proof

Instructions on presumptions and the burden of proof should be appropriate under the issues in the case and should correctly set forth the law.

The general rules as to the propriety of instructions under the issues presented, and the necessity that instructions correctly set forth the law, have been applied to instructions on or involving presumptions or inferences,⁶² such as presumptions or inferences as to contributory negligence,⁶³ responsibility of the owner of a motor vehicle for an injury arising out of the operation thereof by another person,⁶⁴ or, likewise, presumptions or in-acts in emergencies,⁶⁹ sole or proximate cause,⁷⁰ new and independent cause,⁷¹ liability of one person, such as the owner of the motor vehicle, for injuries arising out of the operation thereof by another person,⁷² or shifting of the burden.⁷³

An instruction that there is a presumption that every person exercises ordinary care for his own safety and that he obeys the law may be proper under the circumstances of some cases, as where a participant in an accident is dead or, for any other reason, is unable to give an account of what occurred, and his side of the case is not fully covered by the testimony of witnesses called on his behalf;⁷⁴ but such an instruction should not be given in a case where all the parties are alive and the facts are placed before the jury by the testimony of the parties and the witnesses.⁷⁵ An instruction in favor of a party that there is a presumption that every man obeys the law is properly refused where it appears that such party was guilty of negligence as a matter of law.⁷⁶ An instruction which requires plaintiff to prove at least one of the material allegations of the complaint, but which does not inform the jury what constitutes the material allegations thereof, has been held improper.⁷⁷

Res ipsa loquitur. The general rules as to the applicability of an instruction under the facts of the case, and the necessity that it set forth the law correctly, have been applied to instructions involving the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.⁷⁸
